"Now stir the fire and close the shutters fast,
Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round,
And wipe the mopping and looking glass
Throws up a steamy column, and the cup
Which cheer but not intoxicate wait on each,
So let us welcome peaceful evening in."—Cooper's Winter Evening.

WINTER EVENINGS' ENJOYMENT.

Gentle Reader.—Do you possess that charming discovery of Sir David Brewster's—the Lenticular Stereoscope? If not, at once add a "New Pleasure" to your home. You will find it a delightful companion in solitude, and for social and domestic gatherings, an unfailing source of intellectual enjoyment. With it no company can ever be dull—the themes of conversation it suggests are as boundless as the pleasure it affords.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"You are under the fascination that you are contemplating reality itself. The two pictures become one, and produce effects hitherto unknown to art. The living smile, the characteristic expression, the distinctiveness of individual existence are there. In Nature, the snowy landscape, the mountain torrent, and the delicacies of the way-side flower, are there in depth, in detail, in truth. In a word, all the objects comprised in a voyage round the world may be viewed at our own firesides, as if the scenes themselves were under actual contemplation. We look upon this invention as one of the wonders of our age."—Britannia.

"A most remarkable collection."—Athenæum.

"We cannot recommend to our readers who have not yet witnessed the extraordinary effect produced by those instruments, a more elegant treat, than to go and see for themselves. We seemed to be standing amidst the scenes portrayed, so lifelike did they appear; the loveliest scenes of nature, and the grandest achievements of human genius are thus brought in all their reality within the circle of our own homes."—Morning Advertiser.

"The grandest subjects of ancient art, with cities that are world-renowned—Pompeii as Layard saw it. It is a most wonderful instrument."—Morning Chronicle.

"Marvels of beauty, accuracy, and solidity."—Daily News.

"Unsurpassed for beauty, tone, and sharpness."—Notes and Queries.

"Their groups and views are the finest we ever saw, and the improvements now made render the invention perfect."—Art Journal.

"Vast fields of enjoyment are presented to us in a manner which seems little short of miraculous. For social and domestic pleasure, we know of nothing which affords so much gratification as this charming little instrument."—Morning Herald.

EIGHTH EDITION.

Volumes I. to IX. are now published, in Quarto, Cloth, Price 24s. each.

NOW that this Edition has reached nearly the centre of its course, it does not seem an ill-timed occasion to draw attention to its particular merits. Since the completion of the First Edition of this Work in 1771, each succeeding issue has had its stores enriched by the contributions of the most distinguished men of Science and Literature; but the Editor has no hesitation in affirming, that in no previous Edition have the improvements been so extensive or important as in the Eighth now publishing. For every article of particular importance, the Editor has made it his endeavour to secure the services of the ablest and best qualified Writers, and the List of Contributors already published fully testifies to the efficacy of this department of the Work. But while the greatest attention has been paid to these, the Editor has also held it to be of essential value to a work of every-day reference, such as this, to bestow equal pains on articles of minor note; and indeed this real merit and necessary qualification of an Encyclopaedia—the treatment of every article according to its comparative claim—has been the special object of his care.

In fine, it requires only a superficial examination of the two last Editions to discover the superiority of the Eighth, which has been so changed and remodelled, that, with the exception of standard articles of permanent value, few traces are to be found in it of the Seventh or preceding Editions.

THE

HOUSEHOLD WORDS ALMANAC,

FOR THE YEAR 1856.

Our Almanac.—We have been at some pains to prepare an Almanac for the coming year. It is now published; and we may be allowed briefly to make known to our readers the general nature of its contents.

It has been our endeavour, in the preparation of the HOUSEHOLD WORDS ALMANAC, to compress within a small space the greatest possible amount of interest and information, applicable to the varying seasons of the year and of mortal life. The laws that maintain this wonderful structure, the Earth, in its appointed place among the stars, and regulate the winds and waters; the principles on which the preservation of our health and cheerfulness mainly depends; the times of the development of the several kinds of trees and flowers, and when the melody of the various sorts of birds is first awakened; we have tried to set forth in a clear and attractive manner. We have attached to the Calendar of every month, a Chronicle of Progress, enabling the reader to compare the times in which he lives with the times of a hundred years ago. We have accumulated a number of remarkable Predictions, all falsified by the result, inculcating the wisdom of not too venturously binding down the Future. The rearing of children, the nursing of the sick, and the readiest means of doing good in cases of sudden accident or other emergency we have not neglected. It has been our aim to make our Almanac a serviceable friend every day in the year, and, while it is full of human interest, to associate it with every pleasant sight and sound in Nature.

Finally, in the contemplation of the beautiful harmonies by which Man is surrounded, and of the adorable beneficence by which all things are made to tend to his advantage, and conduce to his happiness, we hope we may have necessarily infused into our work, a humble spirit of veneration for the great Creator of the wonderful Universe, and of peace and goodwill among mankind.—Household Words, Nov. 24, 1855.

Early in December will be published, price Threepence, stamped Fourpence,

THE LIBRARY EDITION of the Waverley Novels, produced at a cost of £15,000, is one of the handsomest works published in this country. It is illustrated by upwards of TWO HUNDRED ENGRAVINGS on STEEL, after drawings by Turner, Landseer, Stanfield, Wilkie, Roberts, Frith, Ward, Phillips, Elmore, &c., including portraits of the historical personages described in the Novels. These Plates are engraved in the very first style of the art, and by their characteristic expression, and spirit of execution, impart an additional interest to the text which they illustrate.

All those who would possess a copy of "these inimitable Fictions," in which the creations of the Author are worthily represented by the pencil of the Artist, are recommended to add this Series to their Libraries.

The Library Edition, which contains all Sir Walter Scott's Introductions and Notes, and some curious additions in "Guy Mannering" and the "Bride of Lammermoor," has also a carefully prepared Index to the whole of the Characters and Principal Incidents in the Novels.

Complete in 25 vols. demy 8vo, with 210 Engravings, elegantly bound in extra cloth, gilt, price £18 2 6 and not so, if truth must be told, either the Bailie or I myself, who, without feeling the same degree of trepidation, could not with stoical indifference see our lives exposed to hazard in a quarrel with which we had no concern. But there was neither time for remonstrance nor remedy.

We approached within about twenty yards of the spot where the advanced-guard had seen some appearance of an enemy. It was one of those promontories which run into the lake, and round the base of which the road had hitherto winded in the manner I have described. In the present case, however, the path, instead of keeping the water's edge, scaled the promontory by one or two rapid zigzags, carried in a broken track along the precipitous face of a slaty grey rock, which would otherwise have been absolutely inaccessible. On the top of this rock, only to be approached by a road so broken, so narrow, and so precarious, the corporal declared he had seen the bonnets and long-barrelled guns of several mountaineers, apparently couched among the long heath and brushwood which crested the eminence. Captain Thornton ordered him to move forward with three files, to dislodge the supposed ambuscade, while, at a more slow but steady pace, he advanced to his support with the rest of his party.

The attack which he meditated was prevented by the unexpected apparition of a female upon the summit of the rock. “Stand!” she said, with a commanding tone, “and tell me what ye seek in MacGregor's country?”

I have seldom seen a finer or more commanding form than this woman. She might be between the term of forty and fifty years, and had a countenance which must once have been of a masculine cast of beauty; though now, imprinted with deep lines by exposure to rough weather, and perhaps by the wasting influence of grief and passion, its features were only strong, harsh and expressive. She wore her plaid, not drawn around her head and shoulders, as is the fashion of the women in Scotland, but disposed around her body as the Highland soldiers wear theirs. She had a man's bonnet, with a feather in it, an unsheathed sword in her hand, and a pair of pistols at her girdle.

“It's Helen Campbell, Rob's wife,” said the Bailie, in a PRiCE SIXPENCE.

NEW MONTHLY PERIODICAL.

On the 1st of January, 1856, will be published, price SIXPENCE, No. 1. of

THE IDLER,

A CHEAP MAGAZINE

FICTION, BELLES-LETTRRES, NEWS, AND COMEDY.

The period has at length arrived—but perhaps the reader has heard that expression before?

Briefly, the proprietors of The Idler are about to start it, because (oddly enough), in an age of cheap literature, most magazines are dear, and, in an age when everybody reads, most magazines are unreadable. They hope that it will prove at once cheap and excellent,—cheap, not as dirt is cheap, but as flowers are.

The world of letters requires occasional refreshing. Old periodicals become, in time, timid, flat, and conventional,—the organs of narrow interests. All naiveté and freshness are lost. They cease to be in communion with the living spirit of the time. The light literature of an age ought to be the flower and cream of its thought and sentiment—the out-blossoming of its inner life. But where we should get blossoms, we generally only find fungi. The Idler will do its best to represent what is newest and youngest in England—the England of to-day.

It seems to the proprietors of The Idler that all our popular literature has been too timid of late. The satirical element has been strangely idle, and with the saddest results. The re-appearance of old Christopher North's "Noctes" has been hailed with a groan. Every form of quack considers himself safe, and respectable dulness has even become a kind of virtue. The spirit of Aristophanes and Horace, of Juvenal and Swift, of Martial and Fielding, lies entombed. We make no unseemly boasts—they would ill become lovers of those great names. But the time has come to treat the old corruptions of the world with the old weapons, and to prepare for the enemies of truth and justice a rod pickled in classic brine. No man will deprecate either the utility or the dignity of comedy, or doubt that it is quite compatible with proper seriousness and reverence, who remembers that St. Paul has quoted Menander,

That, however, no one may charge The Idler with a want of practical and substantial information, one regular feature of it shall be a résumé, every month, of the Home and Foreign News. To this will be added an account of New Books; and Literary Papers, strictly so called, will form a conspicuous part of the Magazine.

Perfect independence—perfect fearlessness—the liveliness which makes reading pleasant—and the picturesqueness which makes it human and genial—are the qualities to which they aspire.

Among the contents of The Idler will be found a new Tale, by the Author of "Singleton Fontenoy," "Eustace Conyers," "Satire and Satirists," &c. &c. &c.

Short Tales, Essays, and Sketches, by writers already known in the field of periodical literature.

Portraiture of the Living and the Dead.

Notes on Men and Things, Topographical and Antiquarian.

Reviews of Books, Résumé of the Events of the Month, Obituary of eminent persons. All Communications, Books for Review, &c., should be forwarded to the Editor of The Idler, care of Mr. Hardwicke, 26, Duke-street, Piccadilly. In all cases, Books will receive speedy and impartial notice.

The Idler will be sent post free, for one year, to any person enclosing a post-office order for 6s., payable to Robert Hardwicke, at the Post-office, Piccadilly. A single copy, post free, for 6d., in stamps.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

The exuberance of the feelings amid scenes of gaiety induces the fair and youthful to shine to advantage under the gaze of many friends, and therefore to devote increased attention to the toilet. It is at this festive season that ROWLANDS' AUXILIARIES OF HEALTH AND BEAUTY are more than usually essential, and form peculiarly elegant and seasonable presents.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL

Is a delightfully fragrant and transparent preparation for the Hair, rendering it so admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, imparting a transcendent lustre, and sustaining it in decorative charm during the heated atmosphere of crowded assemblies.

ROWLANDS' KALYDOR,

For the Skin and Complexion, is unequalled for its rare and inestimable qualities. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, the softness and delicacy it imparts to the hands and arms, and its capability of removing cutaneous defects, render it INDISPENSABLE TO EVERY TOILET.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, OR PEARL DENTIFRICE,

For preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and for rendering the Breath sweet and pure.

Sold by A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, AND BY CHEMISTS AND PERFUMERS.

SLACK'S NICKEL SILVER

Is the hardest and most perfect White Metal ever invented, and equals Silver in durability and colour. Made into every article for the table, as TEA AND COFFEE POTS, CRUET FRAMES, CANDLESTICKS, WAITERS, &c.

A Sample Teaspoon forwarded on receipt of Ten Stamps.

[*] These rates of Insurance apply only to persons residing within the limits of Europe.

Railway Insurances extend to Accidents in any part of the world.

To Traders, Commercial Gentlemen, and the Public generally, the first example will afford some idea of the moderate rate of Insurance against Accidents, whether fatal or not.

Carpenters, Builders, Bricklayers, Slaters, Plumbers, and all others engaged in Constructive operations, may be insured under the second example at a reasonable rate, which may be saved out of the weekly wages by means of the Savings’ Bank; thus securing the amount required to meet the annual premium at a small sacrifice.

Forms of Proposal, Prospectuses, &c., may be had on application at the Chief Office, or of any of the Local Agents.

THE BEST FOOD FOR CHILDREN, INVALIDS, AND OTHERS.

ROBINSON'S PATENT BARLEY,

For making superior BARLEY WATER in fifteen minutes, has not only obtained the patronage of Her Majesty and the Royal Family, but has become of general use to every class of the community, and is acknowledged to stand unrivalled as an eminently pure, nutritious, and light food for Infants and Invalids; much approved for making a delicious Custard Pudding, and excellent for thickening Broths or Soups.

ROBINSON'S PATENT GROATS.

For more than thirty years have been held in constant and increasing public estimation as the purest farina of the kind, and as the best and most valuable preparation for making a pure and delicate GRUEL, which forms a light and nutritious supper for the aged, is a popular recipe for colds and influenzas, is of general use in the sick-chamber, and alternately with the Patent Barley, is an excellent food for Infants and Children.

Prepared only by the Patentees,

NECROPOLIS.—WOKING CEMETERY.

Many members of the Aristocracy have now been buried at Woking. 1700 funerals have taken place since the opening ten months ago. The Directors, therefore, feel that notwithstanding the opposition of many persons interested in the abuses of the old system, they have been completely successful in establishing a cemetery for the metropolis far from any populous district, where the usual charges are reduced one-half.

NECROPOLIS.—WOKING CEMETERY.

The Company act as undertakers. They perform the whole funeral. First class funeral in all its completeness, from the house to the Cemetery and back to Waterloo Station, including every possible charge, even the Statuary Work:—

First Class, £21 os. 0d.
Second Class, £18 os. 0d.
Third Class, £14 os. 0d.
Fourth Class, £11 os. 0d.

And complete funerals, without Statuary Work,—

Fifth Class, £4.
Sixth Class, £3 os.

Funerals can be ordered either personally or by post from this firm, by applying to the Secretary, 2, Lancaster-place, Strand; or either of the following Agents:—Mr. Hook, 12, St. Alban's terrace, Kennington-road, Lambeth; Mr. Hutton, 29, Newmarket-street, St. Clement's-in-the-fields; Mr. Johnson, 4, Rodney-street, Pantonville; Mr. Hall & Martin, 8, Chapel-street West, May Fair; Mr. Vincent, Royal Oak-terrace, and Queen's-road, Battersea; Mr. J. Bradby, R. Church row, Newington-huts; Mr. Lee, 28, Clapham-road-place; Mr. Clark, 100, Cambridge-street, Finsbury; Mr. Wycliffe, 24, Duke-street, London-bridge; or to the Superintendent, Necropolis Station, Westminster-road, either of whom will, if required, wait upon the parties and undertake the whole arrangements.

It may be most confidently asserted that the same style of funerals cannot be obtained elsewhere in London for double the amount.

NECROPOLIS.—WOKING CEMETERY.

The most beautiful and the largest in the world. All others are in populous districts, and therefore liable soon to be closed. This must endure for ages. The public are invited to inspect the Westminster Station.

A short branch line enables the trains to approach the chapel.

CHRISTMAS.

THE practice of drinking "to your good health," is one alike honoured by good feeling, conviviality, and kindness. True it is that, in some cases, the friend who drinks to your good-health may think no more about it; but wherever a man's health is proposed in the "loving cup," it could induce some reflection in the individual to whom the compliment is paid, as to whether he has himself endeavoured to preserve the irreparable boon.

A "merry Christmas" is too often marred by unwise indulgences, and epicurean sacrifices. "Keeping it up" is very pleasant at the time, but it "hardly pays" in the long run. Head-aches, indigestion, gout, and prostration, are in themselves exceedingly disagreeable, but indisposition leads to a frightful train of maladies. In short, it is difficult to pass over Christmas time safely and comfortably without the aid of PARR'S LIFE PILLS.

Excellent at all times, Parr's Pills are essentially useful now. They remove all the bad effects of high living, and the dangers of "the bottle" will be entirely mitigated by their use.

The man who is wise as well as merry, knows that, even if he should go a little too far in his devotion to Epicurus and his love of Bacchus, that Parr's simple remedy will make him all right again, and give him the health and energy so requisite when about to commence a new year.

PARR'S LIFE PILLS, of all medicines, is without dispute the best calculated to produce a fine flow of animal spirits, a clear head, and a steady perception.

In Boxes, price Is. 1d., 2s. 6d., and in Family Packets, 1s. each.

DR. DE JONGH’S

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.

The superior excellence of this celebrated Oil, as noticed by numerous Foreign and English authors and eminent medical practitioners, consists in its purity, ENTIRE FREEDOM FROM NAUSEOUS FLAVOUR, and speedy, certain, and uniform efficacy. Being, moreover, invariably and carefully submitted to chemical analysis—and only supplied in corked bottles, to preclude subsequent admixture or adulteration—it possesses a guarantee of genuineness offered by no other Cod Liver Oil. The confidence of the English Faculty in the Pale or colourless Oil—nearly deprived of its active and essential principles by its mode of preparation—has been greatly shaken, as, in too many instances, though administered for a long time and in large quantities, it has been found uncertain, inert, and consequently useless.

TESTIMONIAL FROM DR. LETHEBY,

Professor of Chemistry and Toxicology in the Medical College of the London Hospital, Medical Officer of Health to the City of London, &c. &c. &c.

"I have frequently had occasion to analyse the Cod Liver Oil which is sold at your establishment. I mean that variety which is prepared for medicinal use in the Lofoten Isles, Norway, and sent into commerce with the sanction of Dr. De Jongh, of the Hague."

"In all cases I have found it possessing the same set of properties, among which the presence of choleic compounds and of iodine in a state of organic combination, are the most remarkable: in fact, the Oil corresponds in all its characters with that named 'Huile brune,' and described as the best variety in the masterly treatise of Dr. De Jongh."

"IT IS, I BELIEVE, UNIVERSALLY ACKNOWLEDGED THAT THIS DESCRIPTION OF OIL HAS GREAT THERAPEUTICAL POWER; AND, FROM MY INVESTIGATIONS, I HAVE NO DOUBT OF ITS BEING A PURE AND UNADULTERATED ARTICLE.

"College Laboratory, London Hospital, Sept. 24, 1855."

Sold only in bottles, corked, and labelled with Dr. De Jongh’s Stamp and Signature, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE, by ANSAR, HARFORD & Co., 77, STRAND, LONDON, Dr. De Jongh’s sole Consignees; and by most respectable Chemists in Town and Country.

The Collection will be comprised in Four Volumes, and will contain Mr. Thackeray's early Novels—"BARRY LYNDON;" "CATHERINE;" "THE SHABBY GENTLEMAN'S STORY," revised and in part re-written by the Author; the "BURLESQUE TALES;" the "SOCIAL SKETCHES," from Punch, Fraser's Magazine, and other Periodicals; and the BALLADS and VERSES written during the last ten years.

"This reprint of 'Miscellaneies' is a good service done to the general public. Few books of this season are so sure of a wide and welcome acceptance."—_Atheneum._

"There are not many English writers who have furnished contributions to established periodicals which when collected are so truly, and in the most delightful sense of the word, 'Miscellaneies,' as the minor works of Mr. Thackeray. Of the humour and feeling of his ballads, and the light touch of his satire in short tales and essays, we have charming specimens in the particular volumes before us; and the union of good writing with an excellent spirit of fun promises to make of every volume forming this collected edition a book as perfectly amusing as the present."—_Examiner._

"No author in this productive and charming department of literature has ever exhibited so wide a range of knowledge and sympathy; and though his hero had become a hackneyed topic, the originality with which the work is conceived and executed, the vast variety of facts, anecdotes, and letters, which are now produced for the first time, the new and more truthful light in which the old materials are disposed, render these Memoirs fresh and novel as though Mr. Forster had been the first biographer of the poet, instead of the last . . . . This is real Biography."—Quarterly Review, Oct. 1854.

"A happy result of laborious research, and a finished work of literary art. . . . The whole world of English Literature, just as it stood in the last century, till every mind received an impulse from the beginnings and outbreak of the French Revolution, is here delineated in the most masterly manner, with all its sorrows and all its enjoyments."—Times, Jan. 21, 1855.
The term Popular has been chosen for this New History of England, as a distinctive title, to imply that it is for the People and or the People. The author desires to produce a History of moderate dimensions, adapted for popular use, as a Library Book, amongst all classes and ages.

Its essential characteristic will be, a constant interweaving of what may be called the History of Society—that is, of the Condition of the People—with the History of Public Events, civil, military, and religious. The contents of the first number will exemplify the mode of treatment which will prevail throughout the work. The subjects marked in italics are those which more particularly illustrate the History of Society.

CHAPTER II.

CHAPTER III.

Completion of the First Two Divisions of the English Cyclopædia, conducted by Charles Knight.

CYCLOPÆDIAS OF NATURAL HISTORY AND GEOGRAPHY, EACH COMPLETE IN FOUR VOLUMES.

The "ENGLISH CYCLOPÆDIA," based upon the Penny Cyclopædia of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, of which it is an entirely remodelled and improved Edition, is in course of publication in Four Divisions, viz:—Geography, Natural History, Biography, Sciences and Arts;—each having its own alphabetical arrangement, and each forming, when complete, Four distinct Volumes; the whole Illustrated with more than Five Thousand Wood Engravings. In accordance with such a mode of publication, which has the obvious advantage of completing large departments of knowledge with the most recent information, in a very short period, the Publishers have now the satisfaction to state that

THE DIVISIONS OF

GEOGRAPHY AND NATURAL HISTORY

ARE COMPLETE, IN FOUR VOLUMES EACH.

In this present stage of the publication of the ENGLISH CYCLOPÆDIA, the Publishers desire to add a few words with reference to the efforts that have been made to produce these, the best and cheapest Cyclopædias of any time or country.

In 1853 was commenced the publication of the Geography and Natural History Divisions, and since that period they have been regularly issued in Weekly Numbers and in Monthly Parts. They refer with pleasure not only to the regularity of such issue, but also to the speed of publication, whereby these two divisions, of which the fourth and last volumes are now published, and which present,—to use the words of an article on the subject in the Times,—"all that an ordinary reader is solicitous to know, with reference to these two large departments of human learning," have been satisfactorily completed in the short space of two years and a half.

The next Division of the English Cyclopædia will be that of Biography; leaving that of Sciences and Arts to the last,—thus securing to this important branch the latest discoveries of the Scientific World.
Commencement of the Third Division of the English Cyclopaedia, conducted by Charles Knight.

Cyclopaedia of Biography, to be completed in four volumes.

Third Division.

The Cyclopaedia of Biography.

The publication of this important portion of the "English Cyclopaedia" will commence on Saturday, January 5, 1856. It will be issued in Weekly Numbers, price 6d. each; and in Monthly Parts, price Two Shillings. A Volume will be published every fourth Month, and the Division will be completed in Four Volumes, early in 1857.

A complete biographical dictionary, in a moderate compass, embracing the Lives of the eminent of all ages and countries, is a desideratum which this Cyclopaedia will supply. The Biographical Articles of "The Penny Cyclopaedia" will furnish the foundation of the Work; but large additions will be required to bring those valuable materials up to the present time. It is intended also to include those living names which must hereafter find a place in the history of Politics, Religion, Literature, Art, and Science. A List of the Original Contributors to this department of knowledge is subjoined:—

With Descriptions of the Indigenous Species and Varieties,

By Thomas Moore, F.L.S.,
Curator of the Botanic Garden of the Society of Apothecaries, Author of the "Handbook of British Ferns," &c. &c.

The letterpress comprises, in addition to the scientific and popular names of the plants figured, such information respecting them as is likely to prove of interest and utility. In this information is included the diagnostic marks of each plant, as well as a complete description of its various parts; a notice of its general geographical range, and of the peculiarities of its distribution in these Isles; and, finally, such additional remarks on its habits and variations as is likely to assist the student and benefit the Fern collector.

As by the process which is adopted the accuracy of the figures does not depend upon the skill of an artist, but the plant itself stamps its own impress, faithful representations are in every case insured; the publishers, therefore, confidently anticipate that they will produce the most perfect work which has ever been offered in illustration of this subject.

Messrs. Bradbury & Evans beg to state, that they have added to their printing business a department expressly for designing; line machine engraving; steel and copperplate engraving and printing; electrotyping; and electro surface-printing.

Having for the last three years been engaged in bringing into practical operation the various improvements resulting from scientific researches, they are desirous of drawing attention to the style in which the above descriptions of work are at present executed in their establishment.

Messrs. Bradbury & Evans particularly direct the attention of merchants and bankers to the advantages, in quality and price, which they are enabled to offer in designing and printing bank-notes, bankers' cheques, bonds, coupons, and all documents of a commercial description.

They possess two of the most perfect machines for line engraving hitherto constructed; producing, by their novel combinations, effects which cannot be copied; and providing the best possible safeguard against fraudulent imitation.

CHAPTER I.

SUN AND SHADOW.

Thirty years ago, Marseilles lay burning in the sun, one day.

A blazing sun upon a fierce August day was no greater rarity in southern France then, than at any other time, before or since. Every thing in Marseilles, and about Marseilles, had stared at the fervid sky, and been stared at in return, until a staring habit had become universal there. Strangers were stared out of countenance by staring white houses, staring white walls, staring white streets, staring tracts of arid road, staring hills from which verdure was burnt away. The only things to be seen not fixedly staring and glaring were the vines drooping under their load of grapes. These did occasionally wink a little, as the hot air barely moved their faint leaves.

There was no wind to make a ripple on the foul water within the harbor, or on the beautiful sea without. The line of demarcation between the two colors, black and blue, showed the point which the pure sea would not pass; but it lay as quiet as the abominable pool, with which it never mixed. Boats without awnings were too hot to touch; ships blistered at their moorings; the stones of the quays had not cooled, night or day, for months. Hindoos, Russians, Chinese, Spaniards, Portuguese, Englishmen, Frenchmen, Genoese, Neapolitans, Venetians, Greeks, Turks, descendants from all the builders of Babel, come to trade at Marseilles, sought the shade alike—taking refuge in any hiding-place from a sea too intensely blue to be looked at, and a sky of purple, set with one great flaming jewel of fire.

The universal stare made the eyes ache. Towards the distant line of Italian coast, indeed, it was a little relieved by light clouds of mist, slowly rising from the evaporation of the sea; but it softened nowhere else. Far away the staring roads, deep in dust, stared from the hillside, stared from the hollow, stared from the interminable plain. Far away the dusty vines overhanging wayside cottages, and the monotonous wayside avenues of parched trees without shade, drooped beneath the stare of earth and sky. So did the horses with drowsy bells, in long files of carts, creeping slowly towards the interior; so did their recumbent drivers, when they were awake, which rarely happened; so did the exhausted laborers in the fields. Everything that lived or grew, was oppressed by the glare; except the lizard, passing swiftly over rough stone walls, and the cicada, chirping his dry hot chirp, like a rattle. The very dust was scorched brown, and something quivered in the atmosphere as if the air itself were panting.

Blinds, shutters, curtains, awnings, were all closed and drawn to keep out the stare. Grant it but a chink or keyhole, and it shot in like a white-hot arrow. The churches were the freest from it. To come out of the twilight of pillars and arches—dreamily dotted with winking lamps, dreamily peopled with ugly old shadows piously dozing, spitting, and begging—was to plunge into a fiery river, and swim for life to the nearest strip of shade. So, with people lounging and lying wherever shade was, with but little hum of tongues or barking of dogs, with occasional jangling of discordant church bells, and rattling of vicious drums, Marseilles, a fact to be strongly smelt and tasted, lay broiling in the sun one day.

In Marseilles that day there was a villainous prison. In one of its chambers, so repulsive a place that even the obstrusive stare blinked at it, and left it to such refuse of reflected light as it could find for itself, were two men. Besides the two men, a notched and disfigured bench, immovable from the wall, with a draught-board rudely hacked upon it with a knife, a set of draughts, made of old buttons and soup bones, a set of dominos, two mats, and two or three wine bottles. That was all the chamber held, exclusive of rats and other unseen vermin, in addition to the seen vermin, the two men.

It received such light as it got, through a grating of iron bars, fashioned like a pretty large window, by means of which it could be always inspected from the gloomy staircase on which the grating gave. There was a broad strong ledge of stone to this grating, where the bottom of it was let into the masonry, three or four feet above the ground. Upon it, one of the two men lolled, half sitting and half lying, with his knees drawn up, and his feet and shoulders planted against the opposite sides of the aperture. The bars were wide enough apart to admit of his thrusting his arm through to the elbow; and so he held on negligently, for his greater ease.

A prison taint was on everything there. The imprisoned air, the imprisoned light, the imprisoned damps, the imprisoned men, were all deteriorated by confinement. As the captive men were faded and haggard, so the iron was rusty, the stone was slimy, the wood was rotten, the air was faint, the light was dim. Like a well, like a vault, like a tomb, the prison had no knowledge of the brightness outside; and would have kept its polluted atmosphere intact, in one of the spice islands of the Indian Ocean.

The man who lay on the ledge of the grating was even chilled. He jerked his great cloak more heavily upon him by an impatient movement of one shoulder, and growled, "To the devil with this Brigand of a Sun that never shines in here!"

He was waiting to be fed; looking sideways through the bars, that he might see the further down the stairs, with much of the expression of a wild beast in similar expectation. But his eyes, too close together, were not so nobly set in his head as those of the king of beasts are in his, and they were sharp rather than bright—pointed weapons with little surface to betray them. They had no depth or change; they glittered, and they opened and shut. So far, and waiving their use to himself, a clockmaker could have made a better pair.

He had a hook nose, handsome after its kind, but too high between the eyes, by probably just as much as his eyes were too near to one another. For the rest, he was large and tall in frame, had thin lips, where his thick moustache showed them at all, and a quantity of dry hair, of no definable color, in its shaggy state, but shot with red. The hand with which he held the grating (seamed all over the back with ugly scratches newly healed) was unusually small and plump; would have been unusually white, but for the prison grime.

The other man was lying on the stone floor, covered with a coarse brown coat.

"What!" growled the first. "Don't sleep when I am hungry."

"It's all one, master," said the pig, in a submissive manner, and not without cheerfulness; "I can wake when I will, I can sleep when I will. It's all the same."

As he said it, he rose, shook himself, scratched himself, tied his brown coat loosely round his neck by the sleeves (he had previously used it as a coverlet), and sat down upon the pavement yawning, with his back against the wall opposite to the grating.

"What the hour is," grumbled the first man.

"The mid-day bells will ring—in forty minutes." When he made the little pause, he had looked round the prison-room, as if for certain information.

"You are a clock. How is it that you always know?"

"How can I say! I always know what the hour is, and where I am. I was brought in here at night, and out of a boat, but I know where I am. See here! Marseilles Harbor;" on his knees on the pavement, mapping it all out with a swarthy forefinger; "Toulon (where the galleys are), Spain over there, Algiers over there. Creeping away to the left here, Nice. Round by the Cornice to Genoa. Genoa Mole and Harbor.

Quarantine Ground. City there; terrace-gardens blushing with the bella donna. Here, Porto Fino. Stand out for Leghorn. Out again for Civita Vecchia. So away to—hey! there's no room for Naples;" he had got to the wall by this time; "but it's all one; it's in there!"

He remained on his knees, looking up at his fellow prisoner with a lively look for a prison. A sunburnt, quick, lithe, little man, though rather thickset. Ear-rings in his brown ears, white teeth lighting up his grotesque brown face, intensely black hair clustering about his brown throat, a ragged red shirt open at his brown breast. Loose, scumamanlike trousers, decent shoes, a long red cap, a red sash round his waist, and a knife in it.

"Judge if I come back from Naples as I went! See here, my master! Civita Vecchia, Leghorn, Porto Fino, Genoa, Cornice, Off Nice (which is in there), Marseilles, you and me. The apartment of the jailer and his keys is where I put this thumb; and here at my wrist, they keep the national razor in its case—the guillotine locked up."

The other man spat suddenly on the pavement, and gurgled in his throat.

Some look below gurgled in its throat immediately afterwards, and then a door clashed. Slow steps began ascending the stairs; the prattle of a sweet little voice mingled with the noise they made; and the prison-keeper appeared, carrying his daughter, three or four years old, and a basket.

"How goes the world this forenoon, gentlemen? My little one, you see, going round with me to have a peep at her father's birds. Fie, then! Look at the birds, my pretty, look at the birds."

He looked sharply at the birds himself, as he held the child up at the grate, especially at the little bird, whose activity he seemed to mistrust. "I have brought your bread, Signor John Baptist," said he (they all spoke in French, but the little man was an Italian); "and if I might recommend you not to game—"

"You don't recommend the master!" said John Baptist, showing his teeth as he smiled.

"Oh! but the master wins," returned the jailer, with a passing look of no particular liking at the other man, "and you lose. It's quite another thing. You get husky bread and sour drink by it; and he gets sausage of Lyons, veal in savory jelly, white bread, strachino cheese, and good wine by it. Look at the birds, my pretty!"

"Poor birds!" said the child.

The fair little face, touched with divine compassion, as it peeped shrinkingly through the grate, was like an angel's in the prison. John Baptist rose and moved towards it, as if it had a good attraction for him. The other bird remained as before, except for an impatient glance at the basket.

"Stay!" said the jailer, putting his little daughter on the outer ledge of the grate, "she shall feed the birds. This big loaf is for Signor John Baptist. We must break it to get it through into the cage. So, there's a tame bird, to kiss the little hand! This sausage in a vine-leaf is for Monsieur Rigaud. Again—this veal in savory jelly is for Monsieur Rigaud. Again—these three white little loaves are for Monsieur Rigaud. Again, this cheese—again, this wine—again, this tobacco—all for Monsieur Rigaud. Lucky bird!"

The child put all these things between the bars into the soft, smooth, well-shaped hand, with evident dread—more than once drawing back her own, and looking at the man with her fair brow roughened into an expression half of fright and half of anger. Whereas, she had put the lump of coarse bread into the swart, scaled, knotted hands of John Baptist (who had scarcely as much nail on his right fingers and two thumbs as would have made out one for Monsieur Rigaud), with ready confidence; and, when he kissed her hand, had herself passed it caressingly over his face. Monsieur Rigaud, indifferent to this distinction, propitiated the father by laughing and nodding at the daughter as often as she gave him anything; and, so soon as he had all his viands about him in convenient nooks of the ledge on which he rested, began to eat with an appetite.

When Monsieur Rigaud laughed, a change took place in his face, that was more remarkable than prepossessing. His moustache went up under his nose, and his nose came down over his moustache, in a very sinister and cruel manner.

"There!" said the jailer, turning his basket upside down to beat the crumbs out, "I have expended all the money I received; here is the note of it, and that's a thing accomplished. Monsieur Rigaud, as I expected yesterday, the President will look for the pleasure of your society at an hour after mid-day, to-day."

"To try me, eh?" said Rigaud, pausing, knife in hand and morsel in mouth.

"You have said it. To try you."

"There is no news for me?" asked John Baptist, who had begun, contentedly, to munch his bread.

The jailer shrugged his shoulders.

"Lady of mine! Am I to lie here all my life, my father?"

"What do I know?" cried the jailer, turning upon him with southern quickness, and gesticulating with both his hands and all his fingers, as if he were threatening to tear him to pieces. "My friend, how is it possible for me to tell how long you are to lie here? What do I know, John Baptist Cavalloetto? Death of my life! There are prisoners here sometimes, who are not in such a devil of a hurry to be tried."

He seemed to glance obliquely at Monsieur Rigaud in this remark; but Monsieur Rigaud had already resumed his meal, though not with quite so quick an appetite as before.

"Adieu, my birds!" said the keeper of the prison, taking his pretty child in his arms, and dictating the words with a kiss.

"Adieu, my birds!" the pretty child repeated.

Her innocent face looked back so brightly over his shoulder, as he walked away with her, singing her the song of the child's game:

"Who passes by this road so late?
Compagnon de la Majolaine!
Who passes by this road so late?
Always gay!"

that John Baptist felt it a point of honor to reply at the grate, and, in good time and tune, though a little hoarsely:

"Of all the king's knights 'tis the flower,
Compagnon de la Majolaine!
Of all the king's knights 'tis the flower,
Always gay!"

Which accompanied them so far down the few steep stairs, that the prison-keeper had to stop at last for his little daughter to hear the song out, and repeat the Refrain while they were yet in sight. Then the child's head disappeared, and the prison-keeper's head disappeared, but the little voice prolonged the strain until the door clashed.

Monsieur Rigaud, finding the listening John Baptist in his way before the echoes had ceased (even the echoes were the weaker for imprisonment, and seemed to lag), reminded him with a push of his foot that he had better resume his own darker place. The little man sat down again upon the pavement, with the negligent ease of one who was thoroughly accustomed to pavements; and placing three hunks of coarse bread before himself, and falling to upon a fourth, began contentedly to work his way through them, as if to clear them off were a sort of game.

Perhaps he glanced at the Lyons sausage, and perhaps he glanced at the veal in savory jelly, but they were not there long, to make his mouth water; Monsieur Rigaud soon dispatched them, in spite of the president and tribunal, and proceeded to suck his fingers as clean as he could, and to wipe them on his vine leaves. Then, as he paused in his drink to contemplate his fellow-prisoner, his moustache went up, and his nose came down.

"How do you find the bread?"

"A little dry, but I have my old sauce here," returned John Baptist, holding up his knife.

"How sauce?"

"I can cut my bread so—like a melon. Or so—like an omelette. Or so—like a fried fish. Or so—like Lyons sausage," said John Baptist, demonstrating the various cuts on the bread he held, and soberly chewing what he had in his mouth.

"Here!" cried Monsieur Rigaud. "You may drink. You may finish this."

It was no great gift, for there was mighty little wine left; but Signor Cavalletto, jumping to his feet, received the bottle gratefully, turned it upside down at his mouth, and smacked his lips.

"Put the bottle by with the rest," said Rigaud.

The little man obeyed his orders, and stood ready to give him a lighted match; for he was now rolling his tobacco into cigarettes, by the aid of little squares of paper which had been brought in with it.

"Here! You may have one."

"A thousand thanks, my master!" John Baptist said it in his own language, and with the quick conciliatory manner of his own countrymen.

Monsieur Rigaud arose, lighted a cigarette, put the rest of his stock into a breast-pocket, and stretched himself out at full length upon the bench. Cavalletto sat down on the pavement, holding one of his ancles in each hand, and smoking peacefully. There seemed to be some uncomfortable attraction of Monsieur Rigaud's eyes to the immediate neighbourhood of that part of the pavement where the thumb had been in the plan. They were so drawn in that direction, that the Italian more than once followed them to and back from the pavement in some surprise.

"What an infernal hole this is!" said Monsieur Rigaud, breaking a long pause. "Look at the light of day. Day? The light of yesterday week, the light of six months ago, the light of six years ago. 'So slack and dead!'"

It came languishing down a square funnel that blinded a window in the staircase wall, through which the sky was never seen—not northing else.

"Cavalletto," said Monsieur Rigaud, suddenly withdrawing his gaze from this funnel, to which they had both involuntarily turned their eyes, "you know me for a gentleman?"

"Surely, surely!"

"How long have we been here?"
"I, eleven weeks, to-morrow night at midnight. You, nine weeks and three days, at five this afternoon."

"Have I ever done anything here? Ever touched the broom, or spread the mats, or rolled them up, or found the draughts, or collected the dominoes, or put my hand to any kind of work?"

"Never!"

"Have you ever thought of looking to me to do any kind of work?"

John Baptist answered with that peculiar back-handed shake of the right forefinger which is the most expressive negative in the Italian language.

"No! You knew from the first moment when you saw me here, that I was a gentleman?"

"Atrevido!" returned John Baptist, closing his eyes and giving his head a most vehement toss. The word being, according to its Genoese emphasis, a confirmation, a contradiction, an assertion, a denial, a taunt, a compliment, a joke, and fifty other things, became in the present instance, with a significance beyond all power of written expression, our familiar "I believe you!"

"Haha! You are right! A gentleman I am! And a gentleman I'll live, and a gentleman I'll die! It's my intent to be a gentleman. It's my game. Death of my soul, I play it out wherever I go!"

He changed his posture to a sitting one, crying with a triumphant air:

"Here I am! See me! Shaken out of destiny's dice-box into the company of a mere smuggler;—shut up with a poor little contraband trader, whose papers are wrong, and whom the police lay hold of, besides, for placing his boat (as a means of getting beyond the frontier) at the disposition of other little people whose papers are wrong; and he instinctively recognises my position, even by this light and in this place. It's well done! By Heaven! I win, however the game goes."

Again his moustache went up, and his nose came down.

"What's the hour, now?" he asked, with a dry hot pallor upon him, rather difficult of association with merriment.

"A little half-hour after mid-day."

"Good! The President will have a gentleman before him soon. Come! Shall I tell you on what accusation? It must be now, or never, for I shall not return here. Either I shall go free, or I shall go to be made ready for shaving. You know where they keep the razor."

Signor Cavalletto took his cigarette from between his parted lips, and showed more momentary discomfiture than might have been expected.

"I am a.—Monsieur Rigaud stood up to say it—"I am a cosmopolitan gentleman. I own no particular country. My father was Swiss—Canton de Vaud. My mother was French by blood, English by birth. I myself was born in Belgium. I am a citizen of the world."

His theatrical air, as he stood with one arm on his hip, within the folds of his cloak, together with his manner of disregarding his companion and addressing the opposite wall instead, seemed to intimate that he was rehearsing for the President, whose examination he was shortly to undergo, rather than troubling himself merely to enlighten so small a person as John Baptist Cavalletto.

"Call me five-and-thirty years of age. I have seen the world. I have lived here, and lived there, and lived like a gentleman everywhere. I have been treated and respected as a gentleman universally. If you try to prejudice me, by making out that I have lived by my wits—how do your lawyers live—your politicians—your intriguers—your men of the Exchange?”

He kept his small smooth hand in constant requisition, as if it were a witness to his gentility, that had often done him good service before.

“Two years ago I came to Marseilles. I admit that I was poor; I had been ill. When your lawyers, your politicians, your intriguers, your men of the Exchange, fall ill, and have not scraped money together, they become poor. I put up at the Cross of Gold,—kept then by Monsieur Henri Barronneau—sixty-five at least, and in a failing state of health. I had lived in the house some four months, when Monsieur Henri Barronneau had the misfortune to die;—at any rate, not a rare misfortune, that. It happens without any aid of mine, pretty often.”

John Baptist having smoked his cigarette down to his fingers’ ends, Monsieur Rigaud had the magnanimity to throw him another. He lighted the second at the ashes of the first, and smoked on, looking sideways at his companion, who, pre-occupied with his own case, hardly looked at him.

“Monsieur Barronneau left a widow. She was two-and-twenty. She had gained a reputation for beauty, and (which is often another thing) was beautiful. I continued to live at the Cross of Gold. I married Madame Barronneau. It is not for me to say whether there was any great disparity in such a match. Here I stand, with the contamination of a jail upon me; but it is possible that you may think me better suited to her than her former husband was.”

He had a certain air of being a handsome man—which he was not; and a certain air of being a well-bred man—which he was not. It was mere swagger and challenge; but in this particular, as in many others, blustering assertion goes for proof, half over the world.

“Be it as it may, Madame Barronneau approved of me. That is not to prejudice me I hope?”

His eye happening to light upon John Baptist with this inquiry, that little man briskly shook his head in the negative, and repeated in an argumentative tone under his breath, altro, altro, altro, altro—an infinite number of times.

“Now came the difficulties of our position. I am proud. I say nothing in defence of pride, but I am proud. It is also my character to govern. I can’t submit; I must govern. Unfortunately, the property of Madame Rigaud was settled upon herself. Such was the insane act of her late husband. More unfortunately still, she had relations. When a wife’s relations interpose against a husband who is a gentleman, who is proud, and who must govern, the consequences are inimical to peace. There was yet another source of difference between us. Madame Rigaud was unfortunately a little vulgar. I sought to improve her manners and ameliorate her general tone; she (supported in this likewise by her relations) resented my endeavours. Quarrels began to arise between us; and, propagated and exaggerated by the slanders of the relations of Madame Rigaud, to become notorious to the neighbours. It has been said that I treated Madame Rigaud with cruelty. I may have been seen to slap her face—nothing more. I have a light hand; and if I have been seen apparently to correct Madame Rigaud in that manner, I have done it almost playfully.”
If the playfulness of Monsieur Rigaud were at all expressed by his smile at this point, the relations of Madame Rigaud might have said that they would have much preferred his correcting that unfortunate woman seriously.

"I am sensitive and brave. I do not advance it as a merit to be sensitive and brave, but it is my character. If the male relations of Madame Rigaud had put themselves forward openly, I should have known how to deal with them. They knew that, and their machinations were conducted in secret; consequently, Madame Rigaud and I were brought into frequent and unfortunate collision. Even when I wanted any little sum of money for my personal expenses, I could not obtain it without collision—and I too, a man whose character it is to govern! One night, Madame Rigaud and myself were walking amicably—I may say like lovers—on a height overlooking the sea. An evil star occasioned Madame Rigaud to advert to her relations; I reasoned with her on that subject, and demonstrated on the want of duty and devotion manifested in her allowing herself to be influenced by their jealous animosity towards her husband. Madame Rigaud retorted, I retorted. Madame Rigaud grew warm; I grew warm, and provoked her. I admit it. Frankness is a part of my character. At length, Madame Rigaud, in an access of fury that I must ever deplore, threw herself upon me with screams of passion (no doubt those that were overheard at some distance), tore my clothes, tore my hair, lacerated my hands, trampled and trod the dust, and finally leaped over, dashing herself to death upon the rocks below. Such is the train of incidents which malice has perverted into my endeavouring to force from Madame Rigaud a relinquishment of her rights; and, on her persistence in a refusal to make the concession I required, struggling with her—assassinating her!"

He stepped aside to the ledge where the vine-leaves yet lay strewn about, collected two or three, and stood wiping his hands upon them, with his back to the light.

"Well," he demanded after a silence, "have you nothing to say to all that?"

"It's ugly," returned the little man, who had risen, and was brightening his knife upon his shoe, as he leaned an arm against the wall.

"What do you mean?"

John Baptist polished his knife in silence.

"Do you mean that I have not represented the case correctly?"

"Al-tro!" returned John Baptist. The word was an apology now, and stood for, "Oh, by no means!"

"What then?"

"Presidents and tribunals are so prejudiced."

"Well!" cried the other, uneasily flinging the end of his cloak over his shoulder with an oath, "Let them do their worst!"

"Truly I think they will," murmured John Baptist to himself, as he bent his head to put his knife in his sash.

Nothing more was said on either side, though they both began walking to and fro, and necessarily crossed at every turn. Monsieur Rigaud sometimes half stopped, as if he were going to put his case in a new light, or make some irate remonstrance; but Signor Cavalletto continuing to go slowly to and fro at a grotesque kind of jog-trot pace, with his eyes turned downward, nothing came of these inclinations.
Bye-and-bye the noise of the key in the lock arrested them both. The sound of voices succeeded, and the tread of feet. The door clanged, the voices and the feet came on, and the prison-keeper slowly ascended the stairs, followed by a guard of soldiers.

"Now, Monsieur Rigaud," said he, pausing for a moment at the grate, with his keys in his hand, "have the goodness to come out."

"I am to depart in state, I see?"

"Why, unless you did," returned the jailer, "you might depart in so many pieces that it would be difficult to get you together again. There's a crowd, Monsieur Rigaud, and it doesn't love you."

He passed on out of sight, and unlocked and unbarred a low door in the corner of the chamber. "Now," said he, as he opened it and appeared within, "come out."

There is no sort of whiteness in all the hues under the sun, at all like the whiteness of Monsieur Rigaud's face as it was then. Neither is there any expression of the human countenance at all like that expression, in every little line of which the frightened heart is seen to beat. Both are conventionally compared with death; but the difference is the whole deep gulf between the struggle done, and the fight at its most desperate extremity.

He lighted another of his paper cigars at his companion's; put it tightly between his teeth; covered his head with a soft slouched hat; threw the end of his cloak over his shoulder again; and walked out into the side gallery on which the door opened, without taking any further notice of Signor Cavalletto. As to that little man himself, his whole attention had become absorbed in getting near the door, and looking out at it. Precisely as a beast might approach the opened gate of his den and eye the freedom beyond, he passed those few moments in watching and peering, until the door was closed upon him.

There was an officer in command of the soldiers; a stout, serviceable, profoundly calm man, with his drawn sword in his hand, smoking a cigar. He very briefly directed the placing of Monsieur Rigaud in the midst of the party, put himself with consummate indifference at their head, gave the word "march!" and so they all went jingling down the staircase. The door clanged—the key turned—and a ray of unusual light, and a breath of unusual air, seemed to have passed through the jail, vanishing in a tiny wreath of smoke from the cigar.

Still, in his captivity, like a lower animal—like some impatient ape, or roused bear of the smaller species—the prisoner, now left solitary, had jumped upon the ledge, to lose no glimpse of this departure. As he yet stood clasping the grate with both hands, an uproar broke upon his hearing; yells, shrieks, oaths, threats, execrations, all comprehended in it, though (as in a storm) nothing but a raging swell of sound distinctly heard.

Excited into a still greater resemblance to a caged wild animal by his anxiety to know more, the prisoner leaped nimbly down, ran round the chamber, leaped nimbly up again, clasped the grate and tried to shake it, leaped down and ran, leaped up and listened, and never rested until the noise, becoming more and more distant, had died away. How many better prisoners have worn their noble hearts out so; no man thinking of it; not even the beloved of their souls realising it; great kings and FELLOW TRAVELLERS.

"No more of yesterday's howling, over yonder, to-day, sir; is there?"
"I have heard none."
"Then you may be sure there is none. When these people howl, they howl to be heard."
"Most people do, I suppose."
"Ah! But these people are always howling. Never happy otherwise."
"Do you mean the Marseilles people?"
"I mean the French people. They're always at it. As to Marseilles, we know what Marseilles is. It sent the most insurrectionary tune into the world that was ever composed. It couldn't exist without allonging and marshonging to something or other—victory or death, or blazes, or something."

The speaker, with a whimsical good humour upon him all the time, looked over the parapet-wall with the greatest disparagement of Marseilles; and taking up a determined position, by putting his hands in his pockets, and rattling his money at it, apostrophised it with a short laugh.

"Allong and marshong, indeed. It would be more creditable to you, I think, to let other people allong and marshong about their lawful business, instead of shutting 'em up in quarantine!"

"Tiresome enough," said the other. "But we shall be out to-day."

"Out to-day!" repeated the first. "It's almost an aggravation of the enormity, that we shall be out to-day. Out! What have we ever been in for?"

"For no very strong reason I must say. But as we come from the East, and as the East is the country of the plague—"

"The plague!" repeated the other. "That's my grievance. I have had the plague continually, ever since I have been here. I am like a sane man shut up in a madhouse; I can't stand the suspicion of the thing. I came here as well as ever I was in my life; but to suspect me of the plague is to give me the plague. And I have had it—and I have got it."
"You bear it very well, Mr. Meagles," said the second speaker, smiling.
"No. If you knew the real state of the case, that's the last observation you would think of making. I have been waking up, night after night, and saying, now I have got it, now it has developed itself, now I am in for it, now these fellows are making out their case for their precautions. Why, I'd as soon have a spit put through me, and be stuck upon a card in a collection of beetles, as lead the life I have been leading here."
"Well, Mr. Meagles, say no more about it, now it's over," urged a cheerful feminine voice.
"Over!" repeated Mr. Meagles, who appeared (though without any ill-nature) to be in that peculiar state of mind in which the last word spoken by anybody else is a new injury. "Over! and why should I say no more about it because it's over?"
It was Mrs. Meagles who had spoken to Mr. Meagles; and Mrs.
Meagles was, like Mr. Meagles, comely and healthy, with a pleasant English face which had been looking at homely things for five-and-fifty years or more, and shone with a bright reflection of them.
"There! Never mind, Father, never mind!" said Mrs. Meagles.
"For goodness sake content yourself with Pet."
"With Pet?" repeated Mr. Meagles in his injured vein. Pet, however, being close behind him, touched him on the shoulder, and Mr. Meagles immediately forgave Marseilles from the bottom of his heart.
Pet was about twenty. A fair girl with rich brown hair hanging free in natural ringlets. A lovely girl, with a frank face, and wonderful eyes; so large, so soft, so bright, set to such perfection in her kind good head. She was round and fresh and dimpled and spoilt, and there was in Pet an air of timidity and dependence which was the best weakness in the world, and gave her the only crowning charm a girl so pretty and pleasant could have been without.
"Now, I ask you," said Mr. Meagles in the blandest confidence, falling back a step himself, and handing his daughter a step forward to illustrate his question: "I ask you simply as between man and man, you know, did you ever hear of such damned nonsense as putting Pet in quarantine?"
"It has had the result of making even quarantine enjoyable."
"Come!" said Mr. Meagles, "that's something, to be sure. I am obliged to you for that remark. Now Pet, my darling, you had better go along with Mother and get ready for the boat. The officer of health, and a variety of humbugs in cocked hats, are coming off to let us out of this at last; and all we jail-birds are to breakfast together in something approaching to a Christian style again, before we take wing for our different destinations. Tattycoram, stick you close to your young mistress."
He spoke to a handsome girl with lustrous dark hair and eyes, and very neatly dressed, who replied with a half curtsey as she passed off in the train of Mrs. Meagles and Pet. They crossed the bare scorched terrace, all three together, and disappeared through a staring white archway. Mr. Meagles’s companion, a grave dark man of forty, still stood looking towards this archway after they were gone; until Mr. Meagles tapped him on the arm.

"I beg your pardon," said he, starting.

"Not at all," said Mr. Meagles.

They took one silent turn backward and forward in the shade of the wall, getting, at the height on which the quarantine barracks are placed, what cool refreshment of sea breeze there was, at seven in the morning. Mr. Meagles’s companion resumed the conversation.

"May I ask you," he said, "what is the name of—"

"Tattycoram?" Mr. Meagles struck in. "I have not the least idea."

"I thought," said the other, "that—"

"Tattycoram?" suggested Mr. Meagles again.

"Thank you—that Tattycoram was a name; and I have several times wondered at the oddity of it."

"Why, the fact is," said Mr. Meagles, "Mrs. Meagles and myself are, you see, practical people."

"That, you have frequently mentioned in the course of the agreeable and interesting conversations we have had together walking up and down on these stones," said the other, with a half smile breaking through the gravity of his dark face.

"Practical people. So one day, five or six years ago now, when we took Pet to church at the Foundling—you have heard of the Foundling Hospital in London? Similar to the Institution for the Found Children in Paris?"

"I have seen it."

"Well! One day when we took Pet to church there to hear the music—because, as practical people, it is the business of our lives to show her everything that we think can please her—Mother (my usual name for Mrs. Meagles) began to cry so, that it was necessary to take her out. 'What's the matter, Mother?' said I, when we had brought her a little round; 'you are frightening Pet, my dear.' "Yes, I know that, Father," says Mother, 'but I think it's through my loving her so much, that it ever came into my head.' 'That ever what came into your head, Mother?' 'O dear, dear!' cried Mother, breaking out again, 'when I saw all those children ranged tier above tier, and appealing from the father none of them has ever known on earth, to the great father of us all in Heaven, I thought, does any wretched mother ever come here, and look among those young faces, wondering which is the poor child she brought into this forlorn world, never through all its life to know her love, her kiss, her face, her voice, even her name!' Now that was practical in Mother, and I told her so. I said, 'Mother, that's what I call practical in you, my dear.'"

The other, not unmoved, assented.

"So I said next day: now, Mother, I have a proposition to make that I think you'll approve of. Let us take one of those same children to be a little maid to Pet. We are practical people. So if we should find her temper a little defective, or any of her ways a little wide of ours, we shall know what we have to take into account. We shall know what an immense deduction must be made from all the influences and experiences that have formed us—not parents, no child-brother or sister, no individuality of home, no Glass Slipper, or Fairy Godmother. And that's the way we came by Tattycoram."

"And the name itself—"

"By George!" said Mr. Meagles, "I was forgetting the name itself. Why, she was called in the Institution, Harriet Beadle—an arbitrary name, of course. Now, Harriet we changed into Tatty, because, as practical people, we thought even a playful name might be a new thing to her, and might have a softening and affectionate kind of effect, don't you see? As to Beadle, that I needn't say was wholly out of the question. If there is anything that is not to be tolerated on any terms, anything that is a type of jack-in-office insolence and absurdity, anything that represents in coats, waistcoats, and big sticks, our English holding-on by nonsense, after every one has found it out, it is a beadle. You haven't seen a beadle lately?"

"As an Englishman, who has been more than twenty years in China, no."

"Then," said Mr. Meagles, laying his forefinger on his companion's breast with great animation, "don't you see a beadle, now, if you can help it. Whenever I see a beadle in full fig, coming down a street on a Sunday at the head of a charity school, I am obliged to turn and run away, or I should hit him. The name of Beadle being out of the question, and the originator of the Institution for these poor foundlings having been a blessed creature of the name of Coram, we gave that name to Pet's little maid. At one time she was Tatty, and at one time she was Coram, until we got into a way of mixing the two names together, and now she is always Tattycoram."

"Your daughter," said the other, when they had taken another silent turn to and fro, and after standing for a moment at the wall glancing down at the sea, had resumed their walk, "is your only child, I know, Mr. Meagles. May I ask you—in no impertinent curiosity, but because I have had so much pleasure in your society, may never in this labyrinth of a world exchange a quiet word with you again, and wish to preserve an accurate remembrance of you and yours—may I ask you, if I have not gathered from your good wife that you have had other children?"

"No. No," said Mr. Meagles. "Not exactly other children. One other child."

"I am afraid I have inadvertently touched upon a tender theme."

"Never mind," said Mr. Meagles. "If I am grave about it, I am not at all sorrowful. It quiets me for a moment, but does not make me unhappy. Pet had a twin sister who died when we could just see her eyes—exactly like Pet's—above the table, as she stood on tiptoe holding by it."

"Ah! indeed, indeed?"

"Yes, and being practical people, a result has gradually sprung up in the minds of Mrs. Meagles and myself which perhaps you may—or perhaps you may not—understand. Pet and her baby sister were so exactly alike, and so completely one, that in our thoughts we have never been able to separate them since. It would be of no use to tell us that our dead child was a mere infant. We have changed that child according to the changes in the child spared to us, and always with us. As Pet has grown, that child has grown; as Pet has become more sensible and womanly, her sister has become more sensible and womanly, by just the same degrees. It would be as hard to convince me that if I was to pass into the other world to-morrow, I should not, through the mercy of God, be received there by a daughter just like Pet, as to persuade me that Pet herself is not a reality at my side.”

“I understand you,” said the other, gently.

“As to her,” pursued her father, “the sudden loss of her little picture and playfellow, and her early association with that mystery in which we all have our equal share, but which is not often so forcibly presented to a child, has necessarily had some influence on her character. Then, her mother and I were not young when we married, and Pet has always had a sort of grown-up life with us, though we have tried to adapt ourselves to her. We have been advised more than once when she has been a little ailing, to change climate and air for her as often as we could—especially at about this time of her life—and to keep her amused. So, as I have no need to stick at a bank-desk now (though I have been poor enough in my time I assure you, or I should have married Mrs. Meagles long before), we go trotting about the world. This is how you found us staring at the Nile, and the Pyramids, and the Sphinxes, and the Desert, and all the rest of it; and this is how Tat-ty-coom will be a greater traveller in course of time than Captain Cook.”

“I thank you,” said the other, “very heartily for your confidence.”

“Don’t mention it,” returned Mr. Meagles, “I am sure you are quite welcome. And now Mr. Cennam, perhaps I may ask you whether you have yet come to a decision where to go next?”

“Indeed, no. I am such a waif and stray everywhere, that I am liable to be drifted where any current may set.”

“It’s extraordinary to me—if you’ll excuse my freedom in saying so—that you don’t go straight to London,” said Mr. Meagles, in the tone of a confidential adviser.

“Perhaps I shall.”

“Aye! But I mean with a will.”

“I have no will. That is to say,” he colored a little, “next to none that I can put in action now. Trained by main force; broken, not bent; heavily ironed with an object on which I was never consulted and which was never mine; shipped away to the other end of the world before I was of age, and exiled there until my father’s death there, a year ago; always grinding in a mill I always hated; what is to be expected from me in middle-life? Will, purpose, hope? All those lights were extinguished before I could sound the words.”

“Light ’em up again!” said Mr. Meagles.

“Ah! Easily said. I am the son, Mr. Meagles, of a hard father and mother. I am the only child of parents who weighed, measured, and priced everything; for whom what could not be weighed, measured and priced, had no existence. Strict people as the phrase is, professors of a stern religion, their very religion was a gloomy sacrifice of tastes and sympathies that were never their own, offered up as a part of a bargain for the security of their possessions. Austere faces, inexorable discipline, penance in this world and terror in the next—nothing graceful or gentle anywhere, and the void in my cowed heart everywhere—this was my childhood, if I may so misuse the word as to apply it to such a beginning of life.”

“Really though?” said Mr. Meagles, made very uncomfortable by the picture offered to his imagination. “That was a tough commencement. But come! You must now study, and profit by all that lies beyond it, like a practical man.”

“If the people who are usually called practical, were practical in your direction—”

“Why, so they are!” said Mr. Meagles.

“Are they indeed?”

“Well, I suppose so,” returned Mr. Meagles, thinking about it. “Eh? One can but be practical, and Mrs. Meagles and myself are nothing else.”

“My unknown course is easier and more hopeful than I had expected to find it then,” said Clennam, shaking his head with his grave smile. “‘Enough of me. Here is the boat!’

The boat was filled with the cocked hats to which Mr. Meagles entertained a national objection; and the wearmers of those cocked hats landed and came up the steps, and all the impounded travellers congregated together. There was then a mighty production of papers on the part of the cocked hats, and a calling over of names, and great work of signing, sealing, stamping, inking, and sanding, with exceedingly blurred, gritty, and undecipherable results. Finally, everything was done according to rule, and the travellers were at liberty to depart whithersoever they would.

They made little account of scare and glare, in the new pleasure of recovering their freedom, but fitted across the harbor in gay boats, and re-assembled at a great hotel, whence the sun was excluded by closed lattices, and where bare paved floors, lofty ceilings, and resounding corridors, tempered the intense heat. There, a great table in a great room, was soon profusely covered with a superb repast; and the quarantine quarters became bare indeed, remembered among dainty dishes, southern fruits, cooled wines, flowers from Genoa, snow from the mountain tops, and all the colors of the rainbow flashing in the mirrors.

“But I bear those monotonous walls no ill-will now,” said Mr. Meagles. “One always begins to forgive a place as soon as it’s left behind; I dare say, a prisoner begins to relent towards his prison, after he is let out.”

They were about thirty in company, and all talking; but necessarily in groups. Father and Mother Meagles sat with their daughter between them, the last three on one side of the table; on the opposite side sat Mr. Clennam; a tall French gentleman with raven hair and beard, of a swart and terrible, not to say genteelly diabolical aspect, but who had shown himself the mildest of men; and a handsome young Englishwoman, travelling quite alone, who had a proud observant face, and had either withdrawn herself from the rest or been avoided by the rest—nobody, herself excepted perhaps, could have quite decided which. The rest of the party were of the usual materials. Travellers on business, and travellers for pleasure; officers from India on leave; merchants in the Greek and Turkey trades; a clerical English husband in a meek strait-waistcoat, on a wedding trip with his young wife; a majestic English mama and papa, of the patrician order, with a family of three growing up daughters, who were keeping a journal for the confusion of their fellow creatures; and a deaf old English mother tough in travel, with a very decidedly grown up daughter indeed, which daughter went sketching about the universe in the expectation of ultimately toning herself off into the married state.

The reserved English woman took up Mr. Meagles in his last remark.
"Do you mean that a prisoner forgives his prison?" said she, slowly and with emphasis.

"That was my speculation, Miss Wade. I don't pretend to know positively how a prisoner might feel. I never was one before."
"Mademoiselle doubts," said the French gentleman in his own language, "Its being so easy to forgive?"
"I do."

Pet had to translate this passage to Mr. Meagles, who never by any accident acquired any knowledge whatever of the language of any country into which he travelled. "Oh!" said he. "Dear me! But that's a pity, isn't it?"
"That I am not credulous?" said Miss Wade.
"Not exactly that. Put it another way. That you can't believe it easy to forgive."
"My experience," she quietly returned, "has been correcting my belief in many respects, for some years. It is our natural progress, I have heard."
"Well, well! But it's not natural to bear malice, I hope?" said
Mr. Meagles cheerily.
"If I had been shut up in any place to pine and suffer, I should always hate that place and wish to burn it down, or raze it to the ground. I know no more."
"Strong, Sir?" said Mr. Meagles to the Frenchman; it being another of his habits to address individuals of all nations in idiomatic English, with a perfect conviction that they were bound to understand it somehow. "Rather forcible in our fair friend, you'll agree with me, I think?"

The French gentleman courteously replied, "Plait-il?" To which Mr. Meagles returned with much satisfaction, "You are right. My opinion."

The breakfast beginning bye-and-bye to languish, Mr. Meagles made the company a speech. It was short enough and sensible enough, considering that it was a speech at all, and hearty. It merely went to the effect that as they had all been thrown together by chance, and had all preserved a good understanding together, and were now about to disperse, and were not likely ever to find themselves all together again, what could they do better than bid farewell to one another, and give one another good-speed, in a simultaneous glass of cool champagne all round the table? It was done, and with a general shaking of hands the assembly broke up for ever.
The solitary young lady all this time had said no more. She rose with the rest, and silently withdrew to a remote corner of the great room, where she sat herself on a couch in a window, seeming to watch the reflection of the water, as it made a silver quivering on the bars of the lattice. She sat, turned away from the whole length of the apartment, as if she were lonely of her own haughty choice. And yet it would have been as difficult as ever to say, positively, whether she avoided the rest, or was avoided.

The shadow in which she sat, falling like a gloomy veil across her forehead, accorded very well with the character of her beauty. One could hardly see the face, so still and scornful, set off by the arched dark eyebrows, and the folds of dark hair, without wondering what its expression would be if a change came over it. That it could soften or relent, appeared next to impossible. That it could deepen into anger or any extreme of defiance, and that it must change in that direction when it changed at all, would have been its peculiar impression upon most observers. It was dressed and trimmed into no ceremony of expression. Although not an open face, there was no pretence in it. I am self-contained and self-reliant; your opinion is nothing to me; I have no interest in you, care nothing for you, and see and hear you with indifference—this it said plainly. It said so in the proud eyes, in the lifted nostril, in the handsome, but compressed and even cruel mouth. Cover either two of those channels of expression, and the third would have said so still. Mask them all, and the mere turn of the head would have shown an unsubduable nature.

Pet had moved up to her (she had been the subject of remark among her family and Mr. Clennam, who were now the only other occupants of the room), and was standing at her side.

"Are you?"—she turned her eyes, and Pet faltered—"expecting any one to meet you here, Miss Wade?"

"I? No."

"Father is sending to the Poste Restante. Shall he have the pleasure of directing the messenger to ask if there are any letters for you?"

"I thank him, but I know there can be none."

"We are afraid," said Pet, sitting down beside her, shyly and half tenderly, "that you will feel quite deserted when we are all gone."

"Indeed!"

"Not," said Pet, apologetically and embarrassed by her eyes, "not, of course, that we are any company to you, or that we have been able to be so, or that we thought you wished it."

"I have not intended to make it understood that I did wish it."

"No. Of course. But—in short," said Pet, timidly touching her hand as it lay impassive on the sofa between them, "will you not allow Father to render you any slight assistance or service? He will be very glad."

"Very glad," said Mr. Meagles, coming forward with his wife and Clennam. "Anything short of speaking the language, I shall be delighted to undertake, I am sure."

"I am obliged to you," she returned, "but my arrangements are made, and I prefer to go my own way in my own manner.

"Do you?" said Mr. Meagles, to himself, as he surveyed her with a puzzled look. "Well! There's character in that, too."
“I am not much used to the society of young ladies, and I am afraid I may not show my appreciation of it as others might. A pleasant journey to you. Good bye!”

She would not have put out her hand, it seemed, but that Mr. Meagles put out his so straight before her, that she could not pass it. She put hers in it, and it lay there just as it had lain upon the couch.

“Good bye!” said Mr. Meagles. “This is the last good bye upon the list, for Mother and I have just said it to Mr. Clennam here, and he only waits to say it to Pet. Good bye! We may never meet again.”

“In our course through life we shall meet the people who are coming to meet us, from many strange places and by many strange roads,” was the composed reply; “and what it is set to us to do to them, and what it is set to them to do to us, will all be done.”

There was something in the manner of these words that jarred upon Pet’s ear. It implied that what was to be done was necessarily evil, and it caused her to say in a whisper, “O, Father!” and to shrink childishly in her spoil way, a little closer to him. This was not lost on the speaker.

“Your pretty daughter,” she said, “starts to think of such things. Yet,” looking full upon her, “you may be sure that there are men and women already on their road, who have their business to do with you, and who will do it. Of a certainty they will do it. They may be coming hundreds, thousands, of miles over the sea there; they may be close at hand now; they may be coming, for anything you know, or anything you can do to prevent it, from the vilest sweepings of this very town.”

With the coldest of farewells, and with a certain worn expression on her beauty that gave it, though scarcely yet in its prime, a wasted look, she left the room.

Now, there were many stairs and passages that she had to traverse in passing from that part of the spacious house to the chamber she had secured for her own occupation. When she had almost completed the journey, and was passing along the gallery in which her room was, she heard an angry sound of muttering and sobbing. A door stood open, and within she saw the attendant upon the girl she had just left; the maid with the curious name.

She stood still, to look at this maid. A sullen, passionate girl! Her rich black hair was all about her face, her face was flushed and hot, and as she sobbed and raged, she plucked at her lips with an unsparing hand.

“Selfish brutes!” said the girl, sobbing and heaving between whistles.

“Not caring what becomes of me! Leaving me here hungry and thirsty and tired, to starve, for anything they care! Beasts! Devils! Wretches!”

“My poor girl, what is the matter?”

She looked up suddenly, with reddened eyes, and with her hands suspended, in the act of pinching her neck, freshly disfigured with great scarlet blots. “It’s nothing to you what’s the matter. It don’t signify to any one.”

“O yes it does; I am sorry to see you so.”

“You are not sorry,” said the girl. “You are glad. You know you are glad. I never was like this but twice, over in the quarantine yonder; and both times you found me. I am afraid of you.”
"Afraid of me?"

"Yes. You seem to come like my own anger, my own malice, my own—whatever it is—I don't know what it is. But I am ill-used, I am ill-used, I am ill-used!" Here the sobs and the tears, and the tearing hand, which had all been suspended together, since the first surprise, went on together anew.

The visitor stood looking at her with a strange attentive smile. It was wonderful to see the fury of the contest in the girl, and the bodily struggle she made as if she were rent by the Demons of old.

"I am younger than she is by two or three years, and yet it's me that looks after her, as if I was old, and it's she that's always petted and called Baby! I detest the name. I hate her. They make a fool of her, they spoil her. She thinks of nothing but herself, she thinks no more of me than if I was a stock and a stone!" So the girl went on.

"You must have patience."

"I won't have patience!"

"If they take much care of themselves, and little or none of you, you must not mind it."

"I will mind it!"

"Hush! Be more prudent. You forget your dependent position."

"I don't care for that. I'll run away. I'll do some mischief. I won't bear it; I can't bear it; I shall die if I try to bear it!"

The observer stood with her hand upon her own bosom, looking at the girl, as one afflicted with a diseased part might curiously watch the dissection and exposition of an analogous case.

The girl raged and battled with all the force of her youth and fulness of life, until by little and little her passionate exclamations trailed off into broken murmurs as if she were in pain. By corresponding degrees she sunk into a chair, then upon her knees, then upon the ground beside the bed, drawing the coverlet with her, half to hide her shamed head and wet hair in it, and half, as it seemed, to embrace it, rather than have nothing to take to her repentant breast.

"Go away from me, go away from me! When my temper comes upon me, I am mad. I know I must keep it off if I only tried hard enough, and sometimes I do try hard enough, and at other times I don't and won't. What have I said! I knew, when I said it, it was all lies. They think I am being taken care of somewhere, and have all I want. They are nothing but good to me. I love them dearly; no people could ever be kinder to a thankless creature than they always are to me. Do, do go away, for I am afraid of you. I am afraid of myself when I feel my temper coming, and I am as much afraid of you. Go away from me, and let me pray and cry myself better!"

The day passed on; and again the wide stare stared itself out; and the hot night was on Marseilles; and through it the caravan of the morning, all dispersed, went their appointed ways. And thus ever, by day and night, under the sun and under the stars, climbing the dusty hills and toiling along the weary plains, journeying by land and journeying by sea, coming and going so strangely, to meet and to act and react on one another, move all we restless travellers through the pilgrimage of life.
CHAPTER III.

HOME.

It was a Sunday evening in London, gloomy, close and stale. Madder-ning church bells of all degrees of dissonance, sharp and flat, cracked and clear, fast and slow, made the brick and mortar echoes hideous. Melancholy streets in a penitential garb of soot, steeped the souls of the people who were condemned to look at them out of windows, in dire despondency. In every thoroughfare, up almost every alley, and down almost every turning, some doleful bell was throbbing, jerking, tolling, as if the Plague were in the city and the dead-carts were going round. Everything was bolted and barred that could by possibility furnish relief to an overworked people. No pictures, no unfamiliar animals, no rare plants or flowers, no natural or artificial wonders of the ancient world—all taboo with that enlightened strictness, that the ugly South sea gods in the British Museum might have supposed themselves at home again. Nothing to see but streets, streets, streets. Nothing to breathe but streets, streets, streets. Nothing to change the brooding mind, or raise it up. Nothing for the spent toiler to do, but to compare the monotony of his seventh day with the monotony of his six days, think what a weary life he led, and make the best of it—or the worst, according to the probabilities.

At such a happy time, so propitious to the interests of religion and morality, Mr. Arthur Clennam, newly arrived from Marseilles by way of Dover, and by Dover coach the Blue-eyed Maid, sat in the window of a coffee house on Ludgate Hill. Ten thousand responsible houses surrounded him, frowning as heavily on the streets they composed, as if they were every one inhabited by the ten young men of the Calender’s story, who blackened their faces and bemoaned their miseries every night. Fifty thousand lairs surrounded him where people lived so unwholesomely, that fair water put into their crowded rooms on Saturday night, would be corrupt on Sunday morning; albeit my lord, their county member, was amazed that they failed to sleep in company with their butcher’s meat. Miles of close wells and pits of houses, where the inhabitants gasped for air, stretched far away towards every point of the compass. Through the heart of the town a deadly sewer ebbed and flowed, in the place of a fine fresh river. What secular want could the million or so of human beings whose daily labor, six days in the week, lay among these Arcadian objects, from the sweet sameness of which they had no escape between the cradle and the grave—what secular want could they possibly have upon their seventh day? Clearly they could want nothing but a stringent policeman.

Mr. Arthur Clennam sat in the window of the coffee house on Ludgate Hill, counting one of the neighbouring bells, making sentences and burdens of songs out of it in spite of himself, and wondering how many sick people it might be the death of in the course of a year. As the hour approached, its changes of measure made it more and more exasperating. At the quarter, it went off into a condition of deadly lively importunity, urging the populace in a voluble manner to Come to church, Come to church, Come to church! At the ten minutes, it became aware that the congregation would be scanty, and slowly hammered out in low spirits. They won’t come, they won’t come, they won’t come! At the five minutes, it abandoned hope, and shook every house in the neighbourhood for three hundred seconds, with one dismal swing per second, as a groan of despair.

“Thank Heaven!” said Clennam, when the hour struck, and the bell stopped.

But its sound had revived a long train of miserable Sundays, and the procession would not stop with the bell, but continued to march on.

“Heaven forgive me,” said he, “and those who trained me. How I have hated this day!”

There was the dreary Sunday of his childhood, when he sat with his hands before him, scared out of his senses by a horrible tract which commenced business with the poor child by asking him in its title, why he was going to Perdition?—a piece of curiosity that he really in a frock and drawers was not in a condition to satisfy—and which, for the further attraction of his infant mind, had a parenthesis in every other line with some such hiccuping reference as 2 Ep. Thess. c. iii. v. 6 & 7. There was the sleepy Sunday of his boyhood, when, like a military deserter, he was marched to chapel by a piquete of teachers three times a day, morally handcuffed to another boy; and when he would willingly have bartered two meals of indigestible sermon for another ounce or two of inferior mutton at his scanty dinner in the flesh. There was the interminable Sunday of his monarchy; when his mother, stern of face and unrelenting of heart, would sit all day behind a bible—bound like her own construction of it in the hardest,arest, and straitest boards, with one dinted ornament on the cover like the drag of a chain, and a wrathful sprinkling of red upon the edges of the leaves—as if it, of all books! were a fortification against sweetness of temper, natural affection, and gentle intercourse. There was the resentful Sunday of a little later, when he sat glowering and glooming through the tardy length of the day, with a sullen sense of injury in his heart, and no more real knowledge of the beneficent history of the New Testament, than if he had been bred among idolaters. There was a legion of Sundays, all days of unserviceable bitterness and mortification, slowly passing before him.

“Beg pardon, sir,” said a brisk waiter, rubbing the table. “Wish see bedroom?”

“Yes. I have just made up my mind to do it.”

“Chaymaid!” cried the waiter. “Glen box num seven wish see room!”

“Stay!” said Clennam, rousing himself. “I was not thinking of what I said; I answered mechanically. I am not going to sleep here. I am going home.”

“Deed, sir? Chaymaid! Glen box num seven, not go sleep here, gone.”

He sat in the same place as the day died, looking at the dull houses opposite, and thinking, if the disembodied spirits of former inhabitants were ever conscious of them, how they must pity themselves for their old places of imprisonment. Sometimes a face would appear behind the dingy glass of a window, and would fade away into the gloom as if it had seen enough of life and had vanished out of it. Presently the rain began to fall in slanting lines between him and those houses, and people began to collect under cover of the public passage opposite, and to look out hopelessly at the sky as the rain dropped thicker and faster. Then wet umbrellas began to appear, dragged skirts, and mud. What the mud had been doing with itself, or where it came from, who could say? But it seemed to collect in a moment, as a crowd will, and in five minutes to have splashed all the sons and daughters of Adam. The lamplighter was going his rounds now; and as the fiery jets sprang up under his touch, one might have fancied them astonished at being suffered to introduce any show of brightness into such a dismal scene.

Mr. Arthur Clennam took up his hat, and buttoned his coat, and walked out. In the country, the rain would have developed a thousand fresh scents, and every drop would have had its bright association with some beautiful form of growth or life. In the city, it developed only foul stale smells, and was a sickly, lukewarm, dirt-stained, wretched addition to the gutters.

He crossed by Saint Paul's and went down, at a long angle, almost to the water's edge, through some of the crooked and descending streets which lie (and lay more crookedly and closely then) between the river and Cheapside. Passing, now the mouldy hall of some obsolete Worshipful Company, now the illuminated windows of a Congregationless Church that seemed to be waiting for some adventurous Belzoni to dig it out and discover its history; passing silent warehouses and wharves, and here and there a narrow alley leading to the river, where a wretched little bill, Found Drowned, was weeping on the wet wall; he came at last to the house he sought. An old brick house, so dingy as to be all but black, standing by itself within a gateway. Before it, a square courtyard where a shrub or two and a patch of grass were as rank (which is saying much), as the iron railings enclosing them were rusty; behind it, a jumble of roofs. It was a double house, with long, narrow, heavily-framed windows. Many years ago, it had had it in its mind to slide down sideways; it had been propped up, however, and was leaning on some half dozen gigantic crutches: which gymnasium for the neighbouring cats, weather-stained, smoke-blackened, and overgrown with weeds, appeared in these latter days to be no very sure reliance.

"Nothing changed," said the traveller, stopping to look round. "Dark and miserable as ever. A light in my mother's window, which seems never to have been extinguished since I came home twice a year from school, and dragged my box over this pavement. Well, well, well!"

He went up to the door, which had a projecting canopy in carved work, of festooned jack-towels and children's heads with water on the brain, designed after a once popular monumental pattern; and knocked. A shuffling step was soon heard on the stone floor of the hall, and the door was opened by an old man: bent and dried, but with keen eyes.

He had a candle in his hand, and he held it up for a moment to assist his keen eyes. "Ah, Mr. Arthur?" he said, without any emotion, "you are come at last? Step in."
Mr. Arthur stepped in and shut the door.

"Your figure is filled out, and set," said the old man, turning to look at him with the light raised again, and shaking his head; "but you don't come up to your father in my opinion. Nor yet your mother."

"How is my mother?"

"She is as she always is now. Keeps her room when not actually bedridden, and hasn't been out of it fifteen times in as many years, Arthur." They had walked into a spare, meagre, dining room. The old man had put the candlestick upon the table, and, supporting his right elbow with his left hand, was smoothing his leathern jaws while he looked at the visitor. The visitor offered his hand. The old man took it coldly enough, and seemed to prefer his jaws; to which he returned, as soon as he could.

"I doubt if your mother will approve of your coming home on the Sabbath, Arthur," he said, shaking his head warily.

"You wouldn't have me go away again?"

"Oh! I? I? I am not the master. It's not what I would have. I have stood between your father and mother for a number of years. I don't pretend to stand between your mother and you."

"Will you tell her that I have come home?"

"Yes Arthur, yes. Oh to be sure! I'll tell her that you have come home. Please to wait here. You won't find the room changed." He took another candle from a cupboard, lighted it, left the first on the table, and went upon his errand. He was a short, bald old man, in a high shouldered black coat and waistcoat, and long drab gaiters. He might, from his dress, have been either clerk or servant, and in fact had long been both. There was nothing about him in the way of decoration but a watch, which was lowered into the depths of its proper pocket by an old black ribbon, and had a tarnished copper key moored above it, to show where it was sunk. His head was awry, and he had a one-sided, crab-like way with him, as if his foundations had yielded at about the same time as those of the house, and he ought to have been propped up in a similar manner.

"How weak am I," said Arthur Clennam, when he was gone, "that I could shed tears at this reception! I, who have never experienced anything else; who have never expected anything else."

He not only could, but did. It was the momentary yielding of a nature that had been disappointed from the dawn of its perceptions, but had not quite given up all its hopeful yearnings yet. He subdued it, took up the candle and examined the room. The old articles of furniture were in their old places; the Plagues of Egypt, much the dimmer for the fly and smoke plagues of London, were framed and glazed upon the walls. There was the old cellaret with nothing in it, lined with lead, like a sort of coffin in compartments; there was the old dark closet, also with nothing in it, of which he had been many a time the sole contents, in days of punishment, when he had regarded it as the veritable entrance to that bourne to which the tract had found him galloping. There was the large, hard-featured clock on the sideboard, which he used to see bending its figured brows upon him with a savage joy when he was behind-hand with his lessons, and which, when it was wound up once a week with an iron handle, used to sound as if it were growling in ferocious anticipation.
of the miseries into which it would bring him. But, here was the old man come back, saying, "Arthur, I'll go before and light you."

Arthur followed him up the staircase, which was panelled off into spaces like so many mourning tablets, into a dim bedchamber, the floor of which had gradually sunk and settled, that the fireplace was in a dell. On a black bier-like sofa in this hollow, propped up behind with one great angular black bolster, like the block at a state execution in the good old times, sat his mother in a widow's dress.

She and her father had been at variance from his earliest remembrance. To sit speechless himself in the midst of rigid silence, glancing in dread from the one averted face to the other, had been the peaceflest occupation of his childhood. She gave him one glassy kiss, and four stiff fingers muffled in worsted. This embrace concluded, he sat down on the opposite side of her little table. There was a fire in the grate, as there had been night and day for fifteen years. There was a kettle on the hob, as there had been night and day for fifteen years. There was a little mound of damped ashes on the top of the fire, and another mound swept together under the grate, as there had been night and day for fifteen years. There was a smell of black dye in the airless room, which the fire had been drawing out of the crape and stuff of the widow's dress for fifteen months, and out of the bier-like sofa for fifteen years.

"Mother, this is a change from your old active habits."

"The world has narrowed to these dimensions, Arthur," she replied, glancing round the room. "It is well for me that I never set my heart upon its hollow vanities."

The old influence of her presence and her stern strong voice, so gathered about her son, that he felt conscious of a renewal of the timid chill and reserve of his childhood.

"Do you never leave your room, mother?"

"What with my rheumatic affection, and what with its attendant debility or nervous weakness—names are of no matter now—I have lost the use of my limbs. I never leave my room. I have not been outside this door for—tell him for how long," she said, speaking over her shoulder.

"A dozen year next Christmas," returned a cracked voice out of the dimness behind.

"Is that Affery?" said Arthur, looking towards it.

The cracked voice replied that it was Affery: and an old woman came forward into what doubtful light there was, and kissed her hand once; then subsided again into the dimness.

"I am able," said Mrs. Clennam, with a slight motion of her worsted-muffled right hand towards a chair on wheels, standing before a tall writing-cabinet close shut up, "I am able to attend to my business duties, and I am thankful for the privilege. It is a great privilege, but no more of business on this day. It is a bad night, is it not?"

"Yes, mother."

"Does it snow?"

"Snow, mother? And we only yet in September?"

"All seasons are alike to me," she returned, with a grim kind of luxuriousness. "I know nothing of summer and winter, shut up here. The Lord has been pleased to put me beyond all that." With her cold grey eyes and her cold grey hair, and her immovable face, as stiff as the folds of her stony head-dress,—her being beyond the reach of the seasons, seemed but a fit sequence to her being beyond the reach of all changing emotions.

On her little table lay two or three books, her handkerchief, a pair of steel spectacles newly taken off, and an old-fashioned gold watch in a heavy double case. Upon this last object her son's eyes and her own now rested together.

"I see that you received the packet I sent you on my father's death, safely, mother."

"You see."

"I never knew my father to show so much anxiety on any subject, as that his watch should be sent straight to you."

"I keep it here as a remembrance of your father."

"It was not until the last, that he expressed the wish. When he could only put his hand upon it, and very indistinctly say to me 'your mother.' A moment before, I thought him wandering in his mind, as he had been for many hours—I think he had no consciousness of pain in his short illness—when I saw him turn himself in his bed and try to open it."

"Was your father, then, not wandering in his mind when he tried to open it?"

"No. He was quite sensible at that time."

Mrs. Clennam shook her head; whether in dismissal of the deceased or opposing herself to her son's opinion, was not clearly expressed.

"After my father's death I opened it myself, thinking there might be for anything I knew, some memorandum there. However, as I need not tell you, mother, there was nothing but the old silk watch-paper worked in beads, which you found (no doubt) in its place between the cases, where I found and left it."

Mrs. Clennam signified assent; then added "no more of business on this day," and then added, "Affery, it is nine o'clock."

Upon this, the old woman cleared the little table, went out of the room, and quickly returned with a tray, on which was a dish of little rusk and a small precise pat of butter, cool, symmetrical, white, and plump. The old man who had been standing by the door in one attitude during the whole interview, looking at the mother upstairs as he had looked at the son downstairs, went out at the same time, and, after a longer absence, returned with another tray on which was the greater part of a bottle of port wine (which, to judge by his panting, he had brought from the cellar), a lemon, a sugar basin, and a spice box. With these materials and the aid of the kettle, he filled a tumbler with a hot and odorous mixture, measured out and compounded with as much nicety as a physician's prescription. Into this mixture, Mrs. Clennam dipped certain of the rusk and ate them; while the old woman buttered certain other of the rusk, which were to be eaten alone. When the invalid had eaten all the rusk and drunk all the mixture, the two trays were removed; and the books and the candle, watch, handkerchief, and spectacles were replaced upon the table. She then put on the spectacles and read certain passages aloud from a book—sternly, fiercely, wrathfully—praying that her enemies (she made them by her tone and manner expressly hers) might be put to the edge of the sword, con-assumed by fire, smitten by plagues and leprosy, that their bones might be ground to dust, and that they might be utterly exterminated. As she read on, years seemed to fall away from her son like the imaginings of a dream, and all the old dark horrors of his usual preparation for the sleep of an innocent child to overshadow him.

She shut the book and remained for a little time with her face shaded by her hand. So did the old man, otherwise still unchanged in attitude; so, probably, did the old woman in her dimmer part of the room. Then the sick woman was ready for bed.

"Good night, Arthur. Affery will see to your accommodation.
Only touch me, for my hand is tender." He touched the worsted muffling of her hand—that was nothing; if his mother had been sheathed in brass there would have been no new barrier between them —and followed the old man and woman down stairs.

The latter asked him, when they were alone together among the heavy shadows of the dining room, would he have some supper?

"No, Affery, no supper."

"You shall if you like," said Affery. "There's her to-morrow's partridge in the larder—her first this year; say the word and I'll cook it."

No, he had not long dined, and could eat nothing.

"Have something to drink, then," said Affery; "you shall have some of her bottle of port, if you like. I'll tell Jeremiah that you ordered me to bring it you."

No; nor would he have that, either.

"It's no reason, Arthur," said the old woman, bending over him to whisper, "that because I am afraid of my life of 'em, you should be.
You've got half the property, haven't you?"

"Yes, yes."

"Well then, don't you be cowed. You're clever, Arthur, ain't you?"

He nodded, as she seemed to expect an answer in the affirmative.

"Then stand up against them! She's awful clever, and none but a clever one durst say a word to her. He's a clever one—oh he's a clever one!—and he gives it her when he has a mind to't, he does!"

"Your husband does?"

"Does? It makes me shake from head to foot, to hear him give it her. My husband, Jeremiah Flintwinch, can conquer even your mother. What can he be but a clever one to do that?"

His shuffling footstep coming towards them caused her to retreat to the other end of the room. Though a tall hard-favoured sinewy old woman, who in her youth might have enlisted in the Foot Guards without much fear of discovery, she collapsed before the little keen-eyed crab-like old man.

"Now Affery," said he, "now woman, what are you doing? Can't you find Master Arthur something or another to pick at?"

Master Arthur repeated his recent refusal to pick at anything.

"Very well, then," said the old man; "make his bed. Stir yourself." His neck was so twisted, that the knotted ends of his white cravat usually dangled under one ear; his natural acerbity and energy, always contending with a second nature of habitual repression, gave his features a swollen and suffused look; and altogether, he had a weird appearance of having hanged himself at one time or other, and of having gone about ever since halter and all, exactly as some timely hand had cut him down.

"You'll have bitter words together to-morrow, Arthur; you and your mother," said Jeremiah. "Your having given up the business on your father's death—which she suspects, though we have left it to you to tell her—won't go off smoothly."

"I have given up everything in life for the business, and the time came for me to give up that."

"Good!" cried Jeremiah, evidently meaning Bad. "Very good! only don't expect me to stand between your mother and you, Arthur. I stood between your mother and your father, sending off this, and sending off that, and getting crushed and pounded betwixt 'em; and I've done with such work."

"You will never be asked to begin it again for me, Jeremiah."

"Good, I'm glad to hear it; because I should have had to decline it, if I had been. That's enough—as your mother says—and more than enough of such matters on a Sabbath night. Affery, woman, have you found what you want yet?"

She had been collecting sheets and blankets from a press, and hastened to gather them up, and to reply, "yes, Jeremiah." Arthur Clennam helped her by carrying the load himself, wished the old man good night, and went upstairs with her to the top of the house.

They mounted up and up, through the musty smell of an old close house, little used, to a large garret bed-room. Meagre and spare, like all the other rooms, it was even uglier and grimmer than the rest, by being the place of banishment for the worn out furniture. Its moveables were ugly old chairs with worn out seats, and ugly old chairs without any seats; a threadbare patternless carpet, a maimed table, a crippled wardrobe, a lean set of fire-irons like the skeleton of a set deecaased, a washing stand that looked as if it had stood for ages in a hail of dirty soap-suds, and a bedstead with four bare atomics of posts, each terminating in a spike, as if for the dismal accommodation of lodgers who might prefer to impale themselves. Arthur opened the long low window, and looked out upon the old blasted and blackened forest of chimneys, and the old red glare in the sky which had seemed to him once upon a time but a nightly reflection of the fiery environment that was presented to his childish fancy in all directions, let it look where it would.

He drew in his head again, sat down at the bedside, and looked on at Affery Flintwinch making the bed.

"Affery, you were not married when I went away."

She screwed her mouth into the form of saying "No," shook her head, and proceeded to get a pillow into its case.

"How did it happen?"

"Why, Jeremiah, o' course," said Affery, with an end of the pillow-case between her teeth.

"Of course he proposed it, but how did it all come about? I should have thought that neither of you would have married; least of all should I have thought of your marrying each other."

"No more should I," said Mrs. Flintwinch, tying the pillow tightly in its case.
"That's what I mean. When did you begin to think otherwise?"
"Never begun to think otherwise at all," said Mrs. Flintwinch.

Seeing, as she patted the pillow into its place on the bolster, that he was still looking at her, as if waiting for the rest of her reply, she gave it a great poke in the middle, and asked, "How could I help myself?"

"How could you help yourself from being married?"

"O' course," said Mrs. Flintwinch. "It was no doing o' mine. I'd never thought of it. I'd got something to do, without thinking, indeed! She kept me to it when she could go about, and she could go about then."

"Well?"

"Well?" echoed Mrs. Flintwinch. "That's what I said myself. Well! What's the use of considering? If them two clever ones has made up their minds to it, what's left for me to do? Nothing."

"Was it my mother's project, then?"

"The Lord bless you, Arthur, and forgive me the wish!" cried Affery, speaking always in a low tone. "If they hadn't been both of a mind in it, how could it ever have been? Jeremiah never courted me; 'taint likely that he would, after living in the house with me and ordering me about for as many years as he'd done. He said to me one day, he said, 'Affery,' he said, 'now I am going to tell you something. What do you think of the name of Flintwinch?' 'What do I think of it?' I says. 'Yes,' he said; 'because you're going to take it,' he said. 'Take it?' I says. 'Jere-mi-ah?' 'Oh, he's a clever one!'

Mrs. Flintwinch went on to spread the upper sheet over the bed, and the blanket over that, and the counterpane over that, as if she had quite concluded her story.

"Well?" said Arthur again.

"Well?" echoed Mrs. Flintwinch again. "How could I help myself? He said to me, 'Affery, you and me must be married, and I'll tell you why. She's failing in health, and she'll want pretty constant attendance up in her room, and we shall have to be much with her, and there'll be nobody about now but ourselves when we're away from her, and altogether it will be more convenient. She's of my opinion,' he said, 'so if you'll put your bonnet on, next Monday morning at eight, we'll get it over.'" Mrs. Flintwinch tucked up the bed.

"Well?"

"Well?" repeated Mrs. Flintwinch, "I think so! I sits me down and says it. Well!—Jeremiah then says to me, 'As to banns, next Sunday being the third time of asking (for I've put'tem up a fortnight), is my reason for naming Monday. She'll speak to you about it herself, and now she'll find you prepared, Affery.' That same day she spoke to me, and she said, 'So, Affery, I understand that you and Jeremiah are going to be married. I am glad of it, and so are you, with reason. It is a very good thing for you, and very welcome under the circumstances to me. He is a sensible man, and a trustworthy man, and a persevering man, and a pious man.' What could I say when it had come to that? Why, if it had been—a Smothering instead of a Wedding," Mrs. Flintwinch cast about in her mind with great pains for this form of expression, "I couldn't have said a word upon it, against them two clever ones."

"In good faith, I believe so."
"And so you may, Arthur."

"Affery, what girl was that in my mother's room just now?"

"Girl?" said Mrs. Flintwinch in a rather sharp key.

"It was a girl, surely, whom I saw near you—almost hidden in the dark corner?"

"Oh! She? Little Dorrit? She's nothing; she's a whim of—hers."

It was a peculiarity of Affery Flintwinch that she never spoke of Mrs. Clennam by name. "But there's another sort of girls than that about. Have you forgot your old sweetheart? Long and long ago, I'll be bound."

"I suffered enough from my mother's separating us, to remember her. I recollect her very well."

"Have you got another?"

"No."

"Here's news for you, then. She's well to do now, and a widow. And if you like to have her, why you can."

"And how do you know that, Affery?"

"Them two clever ones have been speaking about it. There's Jeremiah on the stairs!" She was gone in a moment.

Mrs. Flintwinch had introduced into the web that his mind was busily weaving, in that old workshop where the loom of his youth had stood, the last thread wanting to the pattern. The airy folly of a boy's love had found its way even into that house, and he had been as wretched under its hopelessness as if the house had been a castle of romance. Little more than a week ago, at Marseilles, the face of the pretty girl from whom he had parted with regret, had had an unusual interest for him, and a tender hold upon him, because of some resemblance, real or imagined, to this first face that had soared out of his gloomy life into the bright glories of fancy. He leaned upon the sill of the long low window, and looking out upon the blackened forest of chimneys again, began to dream. For, it had been the uniform tendency of this man's life—so much was wanting in it to think about, so much that might have been better directed and happier to speculate upon—to make him a dreamer, after all.

CHAPTER IV.

MRS. FLINTWINCH HAS A DREAM.

When Mrs. Flintwinch dreamed, she usually dreamed unlike the son of her old mistress, with her eyes shut. She had a curiously vivid dream that night, and before she had left the son of her old mistress many hours. In fact it was not at all like a dream, it was so very real in every respect. It happened in this wise.

The bed-chamber occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Flintwinch was within a few paces of that to which Mrs. Clennam had been so long confined. It was not on the same floor, for it was a room at the side of the house, which was approached by a steep descent of a few odd steps, diverging from the main staircase nearly opposite to Mrs. Clennam's door. It could scarcely be said to be within call, the walls, doors, and paneling of the old place were so cumbrous; but it was within easy reach, in any undress, at any hour of the night, in any temperature. At the head of the bed, and within a foot of Mrs. Flintwinch's ear, was a bell, the line of which hung ready to Mrs. Clennam's hand. Whenever this bell rang, up started Affery, and was in the sick room before she was awake.

Having got her mistress into bed, lighted her lamp, and given her good night, Mrs. Flintwinch went to roost as usual, saving that her lord had not yet appeared. It was her lord himself who became—unlike the last theme in the mind, according to the observation of most philosophers—the subject of Mrs. Flintwinch's dream.

It seemed to her that she awoke, after sleeping some hours, and found Jeremiah not yet abed. That she looked at the candle she had left burning, and, measuring the time like king Alfred the Great, was confirmed by its wasted state in her belief that she had been asleep for some considerable period. That she arose thereupon, muffled herself up in a wrapper, put on her shoes, and went out on the staircase much surprised, to look for Jeremiah.

The staircase was as wooden and solid as need be, and Affery went straight down it without any of those deviations peculiar to dreams. She did not skim over it, but walked down it, and guided herself by the bannisters on account of her candle having died out. In one corner of the hall, behind the house-door, there was a little waiting-room, like a well-shaft, with a long narrow window in it as if it had been ripped up. In this room, which was never used, a light was burning.

Mrs. Flintwinch crossed the hall, feeling its pavement cold to her stockingless feet, and peeped in between the rusty hinges of the door, which stood a little open. She expected to see Jeremiah fast asleep or in a fit, but he was calmly seated in a chair, awake, and in his usual health. But what—hey?—Lord forgive us!—Mrs. Flintwinch muttered some ejaculation to this effect, and turned giddy.

For, Mr. Flintwinch awake, was watching Mr. Flintwinch asleep. He sat on one side of a small table, looking keenly at himself on the other side with his chin sunk on his breast, snoring. The waking Flintwinch had his full front face presented to his wife; the sleeping Flintwinch was in profile. The waking Flintwinch was the old original; the sleeping Flintwinch was the double. Just as she might have distinguished between a tangible object and its reflection in a glass, Affery made out this difference with her head going round and round.

If she had had any doubt which was her own Jeremiah, it would have been resolved by his impatience. He looked about him for an offensive weapon, caught up the snuffers, and, before applying them to the cabbage-headed candle, lunged at the sleeper as though he would have run him through the body.

"Who's that? What's the matter?" cried the sleeper, starting.

Mr. Flintwinch made a movement with the snuffers, as if he would have enforced silence on his companion by putting them down his throat; the companion coming to himself, said, rubbing his eyes, "I forgot where I was."

"You have been asleep," snarled Jeremiah, referring to his watch, "two hours. You said you would be rested enough if you had a short nap."
"I have had a short nap," said Double.

"Half-past two o'clock in the morning," muttered Jeremiah.

"Where's your hat? Where's your coat? Where's the box?"

"All here," said Double, tying up his throat with sleepy carefulness in a shawl. "Stop a minute. Now give me the sleeve—not that sleeve, the other one. Ha! I'm not as young as I was." Mr. Flintwinch had pulled him into his coat with vehement energy. "You promised me a second glass after I was rested."

"Drink it!" returned Jeremiah, "and—choke yourself, I was going to say—but go, I mean." At the same time he produced the identical port-wine bottle, and filled a wine-glass.

"Her port-wine, I believe?" said Double, tasting it as if he were in the Docks, with hours to spare. "Her health."

He took a sip.

"Your health!"

He took another sip.

"His health!"

He took another sip.

"And all friends round Saint Paul's." He emptied and put down the wine-glass half-way through this ancient civic toast, and took up the box. It was an iron box some two feet square, which he carried under his arms pretty easily. Jeremiah watched his manner of adjusting it, with jealous eyes; tried it with his hands, to be sure that he had a firm hold of it; bade him for his life be careful what he was about; and then stole out on tiptoe to open the door for him. Affery, anticipating the last movement, was on the staircase. The sequence of things was so ordinary and natural, that, standing there, she could hear the door open, feel the night air, and see the stars outside.

But now came the most remarkable part of the dream. She felt so afraid of her husband, that being on the staircase, she had not the power to retreat to her room (which she might easily have done before he had fastened the door), but stood there staring. Consequently when he came up the staircase to bed, candle in hand, he came full upon her. He looked astonished, but said not a word. He kept his eyes upon her, and kept advancing; and she, completely under his influence, kept retiring before him. Thus, she walking backward and he walking forward, they came into their own room. They were no sooner shut in there, than Mr. Flintwinch took her by the throat, and shook her until she was black in the face.

"Why, Affery, woman—Affery!" said Mr. Flintwinch. "What have you been dreaming of? Wake up, wake up! What's the matter?"

"The—the matter, Jeremiah?" gasped Mrs. Flintwinch, rolling her eyes.

"Why, Affery, woman—Affery! You have been getting out of bed in your sleep, my dear! I come up, after having fallen asleep myself, below, and find you in your wrapper here, with the nightmare. Affery, woman," said Mr. Flintwinch, with a friendly grin on his expressive countenance, "if you ever have a dream of this sort again, it'll be a sign of your being in want of physic. And I'll give you such a dose, old woman—such a dose!"

Mrs. Flintwinch thanked him and crept into bed.
NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS,
THE MOST CERTAIN PRESERVER OF HEALTH,
A MILD, YET SPEEDY, SAFE, AND EFFECTUAL AID IN CASES OF INDIGESTION, AND ALL STOMACH COMPLAINTS, AND, AS A NATURAL CONSEQUENCE, A PURIFIER OF THE BLOOD, AND A SWEETENER OF THE WHOLE SYSTEM.

INDIGESTION is a weakness or want of power of the digestive juices in the stomach to convert what we eat and drink into healthy matter, for the proper nourishment of the whole system. It is caused by every thing which weakens the system in general, or the stomach in particular. From it proceed nearly all the diseases to which we are liable; for it is very certain, that if we could always keep the stomach right we should only die by old age or accident. Indigestion produces a great variety of unpleasant sensations; amongst the most prominent of its miserable effects are a want of, or an inordinate appetite, sometimes attended with a constant craving for drink, a distension or feeling of enlargment of the stomach, flatulency, heartburn, pains in the stomach, acidity, unpleasant taste in the mouth, perhaps sickness, rumbling noise in the bowels; in some cases of depraved digestion there is nearly a complete disrelish for food, but still the appetite is not greatly impaired, as at the stated period of meals persons so afflicted can eat heartily, although without much gratification; a long train of nervous symptoms are also frequent attendants, general debility, great languidness, and incapacity for exertion. The minds of persons so afflicted frequently become irritable and desponding, and great anxiety is observable in the countenance; they appear thoughtful, melancholy, and dejected, under great apprehension of some imaginary danger, will start at any unexpected noise or occurrence, and become so agitated that they require some time to calm and collect themselves; yet for all this the mind is exhilarated without much difficulty; pleasing events, society, will for a time dissipate all appearance of disease; but the excitement produced by an agreeable change vanishes soon after the cause has gone by. Other symptoms are, violent palpitations, restlessness, the sleep disturbed by frightful dreams and startings, and affording little or no refreshment; occasionally there is much moaning, with a sense of weight and oppression upon the chest, nightmare, &c.

It is almost impossible to enumerate all the symptoms of this first invader upon the constitution, as in a hundred cases of Indigestion there will probably be something peculiar to each; but, be they what they may, they are all occasioned by the food becoming a burden rather than a support to the stomach; and in all its stages the medicine most wanted is that which will afford speedy and effectual assistance to the digestive organs, and give energy to the nervous and muscular systems,—nothing can more speedily or with more certainty effect so desirable an object than Norton's Extract of Camomile Flowers. The herb has from time immemorial been highly esteemed in England as a grateful anodyne, imparting an aromatic bitter to the taste, and a pleasing degree of warmth and strength to the stomach; and in all cases of indigestion, gout in the stomach, windy colic, and general weakness, it has for ages been strongly recommended by the most eminent practitioners as very useful and beneficial. The great, indeed only, objection to its use has been the large quantity of water which it takes to dissolve a small part of the flowers, and which must be taken with it into the Observations on Indigestion.

Stomach. It requires a quarter of a pint of boiling water to dissolve the soluble portion of one drachm of Camomile flowers; and, when one or even two ounces may be taken with advantage, it must at once be seen how impossible it is to take a proper dose of this wholesome herb in the form of tea; and the only reason why it has not long since been placed the very first in rank of all restorative medicines is, that in taking it the stomach has always been loaded with water, which tends in a great measure to counteract, and very frequently wholly to destroy the effect. It must be evident that loading a weak stomach with a large quantity of water, merely for the purpose of conveying into it a small quantity of medicine must be injurious; and that the medicines must possess powerful renovating properties only to counteract the bad effects likely to be produced by the water. Generally speaking, this has been the case with Camomile flowers, a herb possessing the highest restorative qualities, and when properly taken, decidedly the most speedy restorer, and the most certain preserver of health.

These pills are wholly CAMOMILE, prepared by a peculiar process, accidentally discovered, and known only to the proprietor, and which he firmly believes is one of the most valuable modern discoveries in medicine, by which all the essential and extractive matter of more than an ounce of the flowers is concentrated in four moderate-sized pills. Experience has afforded the most ample proof that they possess all the fine aromatic and stomachic properties for which the herb has been esteemed; and, as they are taken into the stomach unenumbered by any diluting or indigestible substance, in the same degree has their benefit been more immediate and decided. Milder in their operation and pleasant in their effect, they may be taken at any age, and under any circumstances, without danger or inconvenience. A person exposed to cold and wet a whole day or night could not possibly receive any injury from taking them, but, on the contrary, they would effectually prevent a cold being taken. After a long acquaintance with and strict observance of the medicinal properties of Norton's Camomile Pills, it is only doing them justice to say, that they are really the most valuable of all Tonic Medicines. The word tonic is meant a medicine which gives strength to the stomach sufficient to digest in proper quantities all wholesome food, which increases the power of every nerve and muscle of the human body, or, in other words, invigorates the nervous and muscular systems. The solidity or firmness of the whole tissue of the body which so quickly follows the use of Norton's Camomile Pills, their certain and speedy effects in repairing the partial dilapidations from time or intemperance, and their lasting salutary influence on the whole frame, is most convincing, that in the smallest compass is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle, of so peculiar a nature as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength sufficient to resist the formation of disease, and also to fortify the constitution against contagion; as such, their general use is strongly recommended as a preventative during the prevalence of malignant fever or other infectious diseases, and to persons attending sick rooms they are invaluable, as in no one instance have they ever failed in preventing the taking of illness, even under the most trying circumstances.

As Norton's Camomile Pills are particularly recommended for all stomach complaints or indigestion, it will probably be expected that some advice should be given respecting diet, though after all that has been written upon the subject, after the publication of volume upon volume, after the country has, as it were, been inundated with practical essays on diet, as a means of prolonging life, it would be unnecessary to say more, did we not feel it our duty to make the humble endeavour of inducing the public to regard them not, but to adopt that course which is dictated by nature, by reason, and by common sense. Those persons who study the wholesomes, and are governed by the opinions of writers on diet, are uniformly both unhealthy in body and weak in mind. There can be no doubt that the palate is designed to inform us what is proper for the stomach, and of course that must best instruct us what food to take and what to avoid: we want no other adviser. Nothing can be more clear than that those articles which are agreeable to the taste were by nature intended for our food and sustenance, whether liquid or solid, foreign or of native production; if they are pure and unadulterated, no harm need be dreaded by their use.
use; they will only injure by abuse. Consequently, whatever the palate approves, eat and drink always in moderation, but never in excess; keeping in mind that the first process of digestion is performed in the mouth, the second in the stomach; and that in order that the stomach may be able to do its work properly, it is requisite that the first process should be well performed; this consists in masticating or chewing the solid food, so as to break down and separate the fibres and small substances of meat and vegetables, mixing them well, and blending the whole together before they are swallowed; and it is particularly urged upon all to take plenty of time to their meals, and never eat in haste. If you conform to this short and simple, but comprehensive advice, and find that there are various things which others eat and drink with pleasure and without inconvenience, and which would be pleasant to yourself only that they disagree, you may at once conclude that the fault is in the stomach, that it does not possess the power which it ought to do, that it wants assistance, and the sooner that assistance is afforded the better. A very short trial of this medicine will best prove how soon it will put the stomach in a condition to perform with ease all the work which nature intended for it. By its use you will soon be able to enjoy, in moderation, whatever is agreeable to the taste, and unable to name one individual article of food which disagrees with or sits unpleasantly on the stomach. Never forget that a small meal well digested affords more nourishment to the system than a large one, even of the same food, when digested imperfectly. Let the dish be ever so delicious, ever so enticing a variety offered, the bottle ever so enchanting, never forget that temperance tends to preserve health, and that health is the soul of enjoyment. But should an impropriety be at any time, or ever so often committed, by which the stomach becomes overloaded or disorder ed, render it immediate aid by taking a dose of Norton's Camomile Pills, which will so promptly assist in carrying off the burden thus imposed upon it that all will soon be right again.

It is most certainly true that every person in his lifetime consumes a quantity of noxious matter, which, if taken at one meal would be fatal: it is these small quantities of noxious matter, which are introduced into our food, either by accident or willful adulteration, which we find so often upset the stomach, and not unfrequently lay the foundation of illness, and perhaps final ruination to health. To preserve the constitution, it should be our constant care, if possible, to counteract the effect of these small quantities of unwholesome matter; and whenever, in that way, an enemy to the constitution finds its way into the stomach, a friend should be immediately sent after it, which would prevent its mischievous effects, and expel it altogether; no better friend can be found, nor one which will perform the task with greater certainty than NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS. And let it be observed that the longer this medicine is taken the less it will be wanted; it can in no case become habitual, as its entire action is to give energy and force to the stomach, which is the spring of life, the source from which the whole frame draws its succour and support. After an excess of eating or drinking, and upon every occasion of the general health being at all disturbed, these PILLS should be immediately taken, as they will stop and eradicate disease at its commencement. Indeed, it is most confidently asserted, that by the timely use of this medicine only, and a common degree of caution, any person may enjoy all the comforts within his reach, may pass through life without an illness, and with the certainty of attaining a healthy OLD AGE.

On account of their volatile properties, they must be kept in bottles; and if closely corked their qualities are neither impaired by time nor injured by any change of climate whatever. Price 13d. and 2s. 9d. each, with full directions. The large bottle contains the quantity of three small ones, or PILLS equal to fourteen ounces of CAMOMILE FLOWERS.

Sold by nearly all respectable Medicine Vendors.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," and do not be persuaded to purchase an imitation.
A CLEAR COMPLEXION.

GODFREY'S EXTRACT OF ELDER FLOWERS is strongly recommended for Softening, Improving, Beautifying, and Preserving the SKIN, and giving it a blooming and charming appearance; being at once a most fragrant perfume and delightful cosmetic. It will completely remove Tan, Sunburn, Redness, &c., and, by its Balsamic and Healing qualities, render the skin soft, pliable, and free from dryness, scurf, &c.; clear it from every humour, pimple, or eruption; and by continuing its use only a short time, the skin will become and continue soft and smooth, and the complexion perfectly clear and beautiful. In the process of Shaving it is invaluable, as it allays the irritation and smarting pain, annihilates every pimple and all roughness, and renders the skin smooth and firm. It protects the skin from the effects of the cold winds and damp atmosphere which prevail during the winter months, and will be found beyond all praise to use as a Family Lotion on all occasions.

Sold in Bottles, price 2s. 9d., with Directions for using, by all Medicine Vendors and Perfumers.

A CURE FOR GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

"The Eighth Plague," said the learned Dr. Johnson, "is the Gout, and that man who discovers a Medicine to alleviate its torments deserves well of his country; but he who can effect a cure should have a Monument raised to his memory as high as St. Paul's, as wide as the Thames, and as lasting as time."

SIMCO'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS are sold by nearly all Medicine Vendors at Is. 1½d., and 2s. 9d. per Box, the former containing doses for five, and the latter for fifteen days; and so many individuals, who considered themselves martyrs to Gout or Rheumatism, are now ready and willing to bear testimony of the wonderful effects of Simco's Pills, that the Proprietor fearlessly challenges the whole world to produce a Medicine which at all deserves to be compared to them. There are many instances in which persons have been completely restored to health and activity by taking Simco's Gout Pills, who have suffered from Rheumatic Gout for several years, and had drawn on a miserable existence, having lost the use of their limbs, believing that death alone could terminate their sufferings.

Whilst taking the Pills, no particular rules or restrictions are necessary, as they are warranted not to contain any preparation of Mercury whatever; they seldom produce perspiration, purging, or sickness, but invariably improve the general health, sharpen the appetite, and facilitate digestion. Those periodically subject to Gout, Rheumatic Gout, Rheumatic Fever, &c., should keep these Pills by them, as by their timely use an approaching attack may always be averted, and the tendency of these complaints to attack a vital part be effectually counteracted.

INFLUENZA, COUGHS, AND COLDS.

SIMCO'S ESSENCE OF LINSEED is the most efficacious remedy ever discovered for the relief of persons suffering from Influenza; the first two doses generally arrest the progress of this distressing complaint, and a little perseverance completely removes it. Children's Coughs, as well as recent ones in Adults, will be removed by a few doses (frequently by the first); and Asthmatic persons, who previously had not been able to lie down in bed, have received the utmost benefit from the use of Simco's Essence of Linseed.

Sold in Bottles at Is. 1½d., and 2s. 9d. each.
The 90th Thousand, price only 1s. sewed, or 1s. 6d. in stout cloth boards, (postage free, 1d. extra).

ENGLISH HISTORY,

WITH INTERESTING

Remarks on Manners, Customs, Arts, Dresse, &c.

BY JAMES GILBERT.

"In consequence of the rapidly extended sale and approval of this Work, every page of the present edition has been again carefully enlarged and much improved. By a judicious enlargement of the width and length of the page, one-third more letter-press is introduced, without any increase of price."

"A new, enlarged, and improved edition of a little work, which has long been favourably known in schools and families. It is admirably calculated to do what it pretends to do—that is, to put the young pupil in possession of an accurate knowledge of the leading events of English History."—Tait's Magazine, Sept. 1854.

"We are glad to see a new and improved edition of 'Ince's Outlines of English History,' a work which on its first appearance obtained our approval, and has since been well received by the public."—The Athenæum, Sept. 16, 1854.

"A new and stereotyped edition of a very valuable little book. It contains within a small compass the main facts of English History, and a variety of information respecting the manners and customs of the different periods. Although professedly written for the use of schools, there are few of us who will not find it useful to refer occasionally to its pages."—Lady's Newspaper, Aug. 19, 1854.

"We are pleased to see this very valuable little volume still being multiplied, and extending the sphere of its useful operation. The present edition is very much extended and improved. It now embodies, to an extent nowhere else to be found within the same space, the main facts of the history of this great country, and is calculated to be alike useful to old and young."—The Christian Witness, Sept. 1854.

“This book is not undeserving of the popularity it has obtained: it is full of information, and contains the substance of more knowledge of the social progress, manners, and customs of our ancestors, than many works of far larger pretensions.” —The third review of the Athenæum.

“A great deal of information in a small compass, and the author has availed himself of the latest authorities. We prefer the form of Outlines to Catechisms. It contributes to the formation of more logical views, both by the teacher and scholar. Catechisms are the school-books of parrots.” —Spectator.

“In the system of education sufficient regard is not always paid to impressing on the pupil’s mind the leading points in a branch of study. His memory is confused with a too great variety of details. This manual of Mr. Ince’s is well calculated to counteract this defective method, by affording a well-digested outline, which should be carefully committed to memory, and afterwards filled up by means of oral instruction or reference to larger works. Lively chapters of historical memoranda, and brief sketches of manners and customs, are appropriately introduced. We can cordially recommend this well-digested manual.” —Sharpe’s Magazine.

“Well-digested and useful outlines of our history, and deserves to be a standard educational work.” —Educatic Review.

“Superior to any thing of the kind; here is a clear and comprehensive outline of the whole History of England. We cordially recommend it.” —Wesley Banner.

“A good compendium; it contains the essence of very many volumes, serving not only as helps for the education of youth, but as refreshers to the memory to those who are old.” —Sunday School Magazine.

“Both the plan and style are perspicuous; it is admirably adapted for what it is intended.” —The Times.

“Well adapted for the education of the young.” —New Monthly Magazine.

“The brief statements of the principal events of each sovereign’s reign, are neat and succinct.” —The Economist.

“An improved edition of Mr. Ince’s very useful book.” —The Rambler.

“These ‘Outlines’ are particularly well done.” —Banker’s Magazine.

“A valuable addition to those books specially designed for education.” —Bell’s Messenger.

“A neat and accurate compendium, and written with perspicuity. The events of each reign are arranged under different heads, so as to give at a glance a comprehensive view of the whole.” —Athenæum.

“A new edition, with improvements. It is a little ‘Rapin’ in its way, a history condensed into a nutshell; and we feel assured will, with its companion works, form the future text-books of the young of both sexes. Works intended for the mental culture of the young are sure to meet our approval when properly deserving it; and in the present instance we feel inclined to extend the usual limit of our remarks in favour of the lucid and well-arranged books which Mr. Ince has issued for the rising generation. We could not forbear a smile, on glancing over their contents, at the recollection of the sundry fat quartos and huge folios through which in boyhood we were obliged to wade, for the acquisition of a less amount of information than is here presented within the space of one hundred pages.” —The Mirror.

“The leading points are clearly traced, and adapted for easy transmission to the mind.” —Mark-Lane Express.

“Contains a vast amount of interesting and useful knowledge, and admirably adapted as helps to parents and teachers of youth.” —Tait’s Magazine.

THE NINTH EDITION OF INCE'S (HENRY, M.A.)
OF
FRENCH HISTORY, WITH NOTICES OF
The Manners, Customs, Arts, &c., of the different Periods.

BY JAMES GILBERT.

This Edition has been very carefully revised and extended; it contains one-third more additional matter, and has in every respect been so much improved that it may almost be asserted to be a New Book.

"It affords a very pleasing view of the whole History of France. The author being gifted with a philosophical mind and a classical taste, the subjects, though treated in a detached, are far from being treated in a dry and unentertaining manner."—The Times.

"It abounds in the narration of those romantic events which form the groundwork of so many delightful works."—The Mirror.

"Mr. Ince is not of those men who speak much without saying anything; he says much in a few words."—French Paper.

"A very useful educational work."—Literary Gazette.

GENERAL KNOWLEDGE.

BY JAMES GILBERT.

* * * This edition has been again thoroughly revised as well as very much extended and improved; by an enlargement of the size of the page, and careful arrangement of the type, a very great quantity of highly interesting and valuable information has been added.

"The "Outlines of General Knowledge" embrace a great variety of facts connected with the natural sciences. Even the names of all the divisions into which the moderns have classified knowledge, fill no inconsiderable space. Add to them the names and height of mountains, and names and lengths of rivers, the names of constellations, the names of the chemical elements, the amount of population of the different kingdoms of the world, the amount of their respective taxation per head, &c., &c., and the mere nomenclature seems calculated to fill a tolerably large book. All this, and more than this, is collected in Mr. Ince's "Outlines;" and those not accustomed to the art of the author, will wonder how one small head could carry all he has brought together."—The Economist.

"Well-digested "Outlines," which should be committed to every body's memory."—Sharpe's Magazine.

"Contains for its size a remarkable quantity of interesting and well-arranged information. It would make a valuable present to Sunday schools and lending libraries."—Athenaeum.

"A vast amount of condensed information."—The Rambler.

"Contains a considerable amount of information of a very valuable kind on a variety of subjects, that in ordinary routine of education are too much overlooked, an acquaintance with which is every day becoming more and more indispensable. They are germs which cannot fail to vegetate in the mind, to fructify in the head, and eventually to produce a fourfold reward to him who labours in the acquisition of them."—Sunday School Magazine.

"Calculated to instruct any one of common intelligence on every known topic of importance, and to start him with a mind stored with the accumulated learning of 6000 years."—The Mirror.

"A valuable little publication, full of information in a small compass, creating an appetite for deeper investigation."—Bell's Life.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

On the 30th June, 1855, it is intended to publish the First Number of "THE NATIONAL REVIEW," a new QUARTERLY JOURNAL of General Literature, Politics, and Social and Religious Philosophy.

In originating such a Periodical the Conductors believe that they will supply a want long recognised, and every day more urgently felt by thousands of their thoughtful countrymen, who are unable to identify themselves with any one of the acknowledged parties in Church or State. It appears to us that there is no party, ecclesiastical or political, that is not manifestly embarrassed rather than sustained by its own watchwords and traditions. The established and conventional formulas of thought are confessedly inadequate to express the actual convictions of the time; and, though often liberally interpreted or questionably stretched to embrace the new conditions, this very accommodation virtually surrenders their essential life, and confesses the presence of younger energies and aspirations, which claim independent and original expression.

The effects of this have naturally been unfavourable to periodical literature. We are far from denying the excellent tone, taste, and temper, the great information, the high and available literary talent which characterize many of our leading periodicals; but we believe they suffer from the state of the parties of which they are the organs—they are marked by a want of steady adherence to ascertained principle, of coherent and strict deductions, of defined and searching discussion.

On religious subjects especially we think it painfully evident, that there is not at present in this country any adequate organ for the expression and instruction of the many minds which are trying to combine with a habit of free enquiry, the faithful adherence to realized and definite truth. The very aim at comprehensive principles is not recognised in most quarters; and in others the feeling of reverence, and the real existence of objects for reverence, seem to be altogether disregarded.

The selection of our name is no accident. Having a rooted faith in all indigenous products of thought and feeling, we conceive that too foreign a cast has been imparted to the character of our Christianity by the historical accidents of its introduction into this country. Neither Catholicism nor Protestantism is the growth of English soil; and probably not till Christian truth has shaped itself afresh under the home conditions of affection and character, will the religious malaise of our society cease. The NATIONAL Review will interpret, it is believed, the deliberate faith of most cultivated English laymen, however now scattered among different churches,—a faith that fears no reality, and will permanently endure no fiction. No one who recognises in Historic Christianity God's highest witness and revelation, can suppose that the world and the human mind are, or ever were, abandoned by their Divine and living guide; and we believe that to ignore or to disown the traces of His agency in the excellence and truth of every age, is not piety, but treason to His spirit. To preserve, in our treatment of philosophical or historical theology, the tone of reverence which is due the earnest convictions of others, will be to us no artificial self-restraint, but the expression of natural disposition. With two things only, in this relation, we profess to keep no terms—the conceited Indifferentism, which, as its humour changes, pets or persecutes all faiths alike; and the insolent Dogmatism which treats eternal truth as a private and exclusive property. Believing that in this country, amid all the clamour of sects, the Religion of widest range and deepest sent is as yet without a voice or name, we aspire, in this department of our work, to help it into adequate expression.

As Englishmen, we place unbounded confidence in the bases of English character,—its moderation and veracity; its firm hold on reality; its reverence for law and right; its historical tenacity; its aversion to à priori politics, and to revolutions generated out of speculative data.
We think, however, that even here there is room for a more constant reference to general principle than is now usual in this country. Many of our most influential organs seem to us to wander into discussions of business and detail, which may be useful in the narrow circles of official and merely political society, but are scarcely suited to the perusal of thoughtful and able men in the country at large, whose occupations prevent their following the minutiae of transitory discussion, but who wish to be guided to general conclusions on important topics, and whose incaulcable influence on public opinion makes it most important to give them the means of arriving at just conclusions.

We conceive the office of theory in such matters not to be, as was once thought, the elaborate construction of paper constitutions for all ages and all countries; but rather to ascertain and clearly define the conditions under which the various national characters and institutions have developed themselves; and to deduce, if possible, with fulness and sequence the rationale of the suitableness of each polity to its appropriate nation. We would neither confine our political sympathies at home, nor carry our political doctrines ruthlessly and indiscriminately abroad. We feel no vocation for any sort of cosmopolitan propagandism, which would merge the distinctions of Race in the common features of Humanity; and would assume that what is good for us must be good for all, without regard to intrinsic character or historic antecedents. But we do acknowledge and will enforce those mutual claims of sympathy and duty between nations which no division of the great human family can guiltlessly evade, believing that the virtue and well-being of States is forfeited, not fostered, by selfish exclusiveness, as surely as the egotist, most studious of his own happiness, finds it soonest waste away. The present exciting crisis may not be the most favourable for the prosecution of internal reforms; but the prospect of European danger, and the appeal to all classes for noble sacrifices, which have done so much to sweep away the dissensions of sect and party, and to make the whole Empire conscious once more of the pulsation of a common heart, have, we think, created a conjuncture pre-eminently favourable to the ripening of national sentiment, and the abatement of artificial divisions; and a survey of our institutions and relations, while the dominant temper is thus genial and generous, may prepare a body of opinion uncorrupted by narrow prejudices or selfish claims.
For the working classes we confidently anticipate a social condition far in advance of their present state; we have earnestly at heart the people's happiness and the people's elevation; but we shall not allow our warm sympathies and earnest wishes in this direction to betray us into any faithless compromise of the principles of economic science.

Our object in literature will be analogous to our aim in politics. We wish as before to secure a more constant reference to ascertained principle than we think is now common; but, at the same time, we shall not try to apply arbitrary canons to all writers and all ages, but rather to examine and describe the real features of great literary nations and writers, and explain the manner in which the genius and circumstances of each have influenced the works they have bequeathed to us.

In two points, moreover, it will be our endeavour to avoid errors which have been much and justly complained of in the conduct of other Quarterly Organs. We purpose to study brevity on all topics which will not justify length—and to give to the lighter departments of Literature that share to which they are fairly entitled in a periodical which aspires to please and aid the general reader, as well as to interest the studious one.

Like most other Quarterly Journals, the "National Review" will not be able to find room for more than a selection from the works which from time to time appear. We must endeavour to excel by making that selection judicious. We shall, however, endeavour to give a systematic summary of the new publications on topics insufficiently noticed by the daily and weekly journals—especially Theology and Mental and Political Philosophy. We shall likewise give a list of the books appearing in each quarter which seem suitable for reading Societies, and are most likely to interest the general reader.

EXTRAORDINARY ARRANGEMENTS:

A CHRISTMAS ENTERTAINMENT
ON AN UNPRECEDENTED SCALE.

PROFESSOR ANDERSON
(THE GREAT WIZARD OF THE NORTH)

Respectfully informs the Nobility and Public that the management of the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden (The Royal Italian Opera House), will devolve on him at Christmas. In order that the Entertainment may be commensurate to the prestige and character of this, the NOBLEST THEATRE IN THE METROPOLIS, he has made arrangements (which have been in progress for some months past) for the production of a SUPERB SPECTACULAR PANTOMIME, on a scale of magnificence hitherto unattempted, and the attractions of which will, it is hoped, outclass any former pantomimic displays at this or any other Theatre. Every department is entrusted to the most competent hands; the NEW SCENERY (painted expressly for the occasion) will be by Mr. WILLIAM BEVERLEY and Assistants. The Spectacle arranged and produced by Mr. A. HARRIS, with the same attention to Scenery, Costume, and Effects, which has characterised their productions of Rigoletto, Il Trovatore, L'Étoile du Nord, and the various Operas lately produced at this, the recognised chief Theatre in Europe for Spectacular display; the Comic portions will be entrusted to the First Comic Artists of England and France, engagements having been made with all who rank pre-eminent in their art.

THE BALLET
will be of such a character as fully to sustain the justly celebrated character of this the Royal Theatre.

In consequence of Mr. Anderson opening COVENT GARDEN THEATRE, on WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26th, 1855, his representations of the highly-successful Eleusinian Spectacle of 'MAGIC & MYSTERY', AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE, which will have attained the 100th Night of Representation on Tuesday, December 11th, will POSITIVELY CLOSE on SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22nd, 1855.

Full particulars relative to Covent Garden Theatre will shortly be published.
EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

The following Works are not only incomparably the Cheapest and Best for the Use of Schools, but, to the intelligent class of Adults, or those whose Education has been neglected in their Youth, and who are desirous of Self-Instruction, they will be found incontestably superior to any Works of the same Class ever published.

THE POPULAR EDUCATOR is the most comprehensive and compendious Educational Work ever issued from the press. It is now completed in Six Volumes, crown quarto, price 4s. 6d. each, in cloth boards, or in three Double Volumes, price 8s. 6d. each. These Volumes form an Encyclopedia of Instruction, popular and easy of acquirement, commencing with simple rules, immediately interesting the Pupil, and urging him rapidly on, from one stage to another, until perfection is attained. The Course includes:

Languages:—French, 82 Lessons, and 84 Readings; French Pronunciation, 18 Lessons; German, 86 Lessons; German Pronunciation, 13 Lessons; Italian, 53 Lessons; Spanish, 23 Lessons; Latin, 60 Lessons; Greek, 62 Lessons; English, 72 Lessons.

Sciences:—In these the Lessons are illustrated by several hundred Engravings, Diagrams, &c. They include Natural Philosophy, a complete Course in 75 Lessons; Chemistry, 38 Lessons; Botany, 16 Lessons; Geology, 61 Lessons; Geography, with Maps, 30 Lessons; Natural History, 28 Lessons; Geometry, 35 Lessons; Arithmetic, 37 Lessons; Algebra, 30 Lessons; Book-keeping, 24 Lessons; Trigonometry, 6 Lessons; Architecture, 6 Lessons: a complete Series of Lessons on Music, with engraved examples; also on Drawing, Penmanship, Phonetic Shorthand, Ancient History, Biography, Reading, and Eloquence, with numerous examples; Moral Science, the Theory and Practice of Teaching, Physical Education, Gymnastics, &c. &c.

For the acquisition of the French Language without the aid of a Master.

CASSELL'S FRENCH AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY, composed from the French Dictionaries of the French Academy, Bescherelle, Landais, &c.; from the English Dictionaries of Ogilvie, Johnson, Webster, &c.; and from the Technological and Scientific Dictionaries of both Languages, by Professors De Lolme and Wallace, and HENRY BRIDGEMAN, Esq. In Two Divisions: I. French-English. II. English-French; price, bound in cloth, 3s. 6d. each, or the Two in One Volume, strongly bound, price 9s. 6d. Though completed but a short time since, this Dictionary has secured a sale of upwards of Three Thousand copies. It is acknowledged to be the most perfect Dictionary extant. The Morning Post thus speaks of it:—"The appearance of this volume will be hailed with satisfaction. Its publication will supply a want long felt by all engaged in the labour of education,—a thoroughly good and cheap French-English and English-French Dictionary. The compilers have brought into it not only all words belonging to both languages proper, but have included a great number of modern words which custom has adopted, but which have not as yet found their way into any other existing Dictionary. They have endeavoured to translate our examples and proverbs, not merely in their literal sense, but by their real equivalents, and to render our definitions concise, clear, and true. The work is entitled to take a high place among the educational literature to which it belongs; and the care and labour bestowed upon its production reflect great credit upon the compilers and the publisher." Also obtainable in Numbers, at 3d., and Parts, at 1s. Cases for binding the Volume, price 9d.
Works Published by W. KENT & Co., Paternoster Row, London.

CASSELL'S LESSONS IN FRENCH.—Parts I. and II. By Professor Fasquelle. These Lessons have not been surpassed by any which have been published. They contain a complete, systematic Grammar, including Etymology and Syntax, with copious References to the Idioms, and Examples from the best French Writers, with parallel Translations, furnishing the means of acquiring a full, accurate, and permanent knowledge of the French Language. Price 2s. each, in paper covers, or 2s. 6d. in cloth. Complete in One Volume, price 4s. 6d.

KEY TO THE EXERCISES IN CASSELL'S LESSONS IN FRENCH. Paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

A COMPLETE MANUAL OF THE FRENCH LANGUAGE. By Professor De Lomme. Price 8s., neatly bound. In this Manual the Grammatical Principles of the Language are clearly laid down, and copiously illustrated by suitable Exercises, and a compendious Vocabulary of Substantives, Adjectives, Verbs, and Particles. The Examples are on sentences used every day, and indispensable to enable the pupil to speak correctly.

CASSELL'S COLLOQUIAL FRENCH READER; or, Interesting Narratives in French, for Translation, accompanied by Conversational Exercises; with Grammatical and Idiomatical References to "Cassell's Lessons in French," the Explanation of the most difficult Passages, and a complete Vocabulary. Price 2s. in paper covers, 2s. 6d. neat cloth.

A SERIES OF LESSONS IN FRENCH, WITH RULES FOR PRONUNCIATION, on an entirely Novel and Simple Plan. Reprinted, in a revised form, from "The Working Man's Friend." Price 6d., by post, 7d. More than 30,000 Copies of this Work have been sold. The immense sale of this little Work shows the estimation in which it is held by the public.
Every Student wishing to make himself Master of the German Language should possess the following Works:—

CASSELL'S GERMAN PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY. In Two Parts:—I. German-English, price, in paper covers, 3s.; cloth boards, 5s. 6d. II. English-German, price, in paper covers, 3s. 6d.; cloth boards, 4s.; or complete in One Volume, handsomely bound in cloth, 9s. The grand distinctive feature of this Work is indicated in its title. It is a Pronouncing Dictionary; that is to say, it contains the pronunciation, as well as the meanings, of each word. This circumstance adds much to its utility, especially for the numerous class of Self-educating Students who do not enjoy the benefit of oral instruction from a native of Germany. To such persons, and to others also, it is a great advantage to see the correct pronunciation of every word at a glance, without having to stop to think, or being in any danger of mistake. While the insertion of the pronunciation constitutes a leading feature in this Dictionary, it has other excellencies, the aim of the Editor having been to make it as practically useful as possible to persons of all classes. Also to be had in Numbers, at 3d.; and Parts, at 1s. Cases for binding the Volume, 9d. each.

CASSELL'S LESSONS IN GERMAN. Parts I. and II. Price 2s. each in paper covers, or 2s. 6d. cloth. The Two Parts bound together, price 4s. 6d. Containing a complete View of the Idioms of the German Language, in a Series of Easy, Progressive Lessons, by which the Self-educating Student may learn to read, to speak, and to write that Language with the greatest facility.

KEY TO THE EXERCISES IN CASSELL'S LESSONS IN GERMAN. Paper covers, 1s., cloth, 1s. 6d.

CASSELL'S ECLECTIC GERMAN READER; containing Choice Selections from the best German Authors, in Prose and Verse, and a complete Vocabulary to the Work; also, copious References to "Cassell's Lessons in German." Price 2s. paper covers, or 2s. 6d. cloth.

CASSELL'S LESSONS IN GERMAN PRONUNCIATION; consisting of Easy Extracts from German Writers. Price 1s. paper covers, or 1s. 6d. cloth.

_Students wishing to acquire a perfect knowledge of Latin will find the following Works invaluable._

CASSELL'S LATIN DICTIONARY. In Two Parts:—

I. Latin-English. Price, in paper covers, 4s.; cloth boards, 5s. II. English-Latin. Price, in paper covers, 4s.; cloth boards, 5s.; or handsomely bound in One Volume, price 9s. 6d. May also be obtained in Numbers, at 3d.; and Parts, at 1s. each. Cases for binding the complete Volume, price 9d. By J. R. BEARD, D.D., and C. BEARD, B.A. This Dictionary comprehends every word used by the most eminent Latin writers. The meanings of each word are arranged, as far as possible, in their etymological order; and brief illustrative quotations are appended, which will afford substantial help to the Student. Many excellences, hitherto characteristic of more voluminous works, have been compressed into the space of this Dictionary, without in any way sacrificing clearness.

CASSELL'S LESSONS IN LATIN; being an Elementary Grammar of the Latin Language, in a Series of Easy and Progressive Lessons; with numerous Exercises for Translation from English into Latin, and Latin into English; intended especially for those who are desirous of learning Latin without a Master. By the Rev. J. R. Beard, D.D. Reprinted from the "Popular Educator." Price 2s. 6d. paper covers, or 3s. neat cloth.

A KEY TO CASSELL'S LESSONS IN LATIN; containing Translations of all the Exercises. Price Is. paper covers, or 1s. 6d. cloth.

CASSELL'S LATIN GRAMMAR. By Professors E. A. Andrews and S. Stoddard. Revised and Corrected. Price 3s. 6d. in cloth boards. This Grammar has been put to the test of experience, and pronounced by competent judges, who have brought it into use, to be a production of superior merit. With such credentials in its favour, the Work may be safely left to the decision of public opinion.

CASSELL'S SHILLING EDITION OF FIRST LESSONS IN LATIN. By Professors E. A. Andrews and S. Stoddard. Revised and Corrected. Price Is. paper covers, or 1s. 6d. neat cloth. As a cheap and useful introduction to the Latin Language, this Work will bear comparison with any other of a similar nature.

CASSELL'S CLASSICAL LIBRARY.—The First Volume of this Work, price Is. 6d. cloth, consists of a Latin Reader, Adapted to "Cassell's Latin Grammar," consisting of Fables, Mythology, Anecdotes of Eminent Men, Roman History, and Ancient Geography; to which is appended an appropriate Dictionary.—Volume II. comprises Latin Exercises. Price 2s. neat cloth.—Volume III. contains the Acts of the Apostles in the original Greek, with copious Notes and a Lexicon. Price 2s. 6d. neat cloth.

ENGLISH.

CASSELL'S ENGLISH SPELLING AND READING BOOK, with upwards of one Hundred and Fifty Engravings on Wood. The Orthographical Portion of this Spelling-Book is taken, for the most part, from the "Elementary Spelling-Book," by Noah Webster, LL.D., of Connecticut, the sale of which, in the United States, has reached One Million copies per annum. It includes numerous Exercises in Spelling. The Lessons in Reading are suited to the Capacities of Children, and to their gradual progress in general knowledge, and enlivened by appeals to their senses through the medium of Pictorial Representations. Price Is. bound in cloth.

CASSELL’S LESSONS IN ENGLISH. By J. R. Beard, D.D. In paper covers, 3s.; in cloth boards, 3s. 6d. This Manual is intended for the use of Self-educating Students. It contains a Practical Grammar, and includes an account of the facts of the language, involving the laws of its construction, and the productions of the language, historically treated; thus comprising its literature. It abounds with interesting and important explanations and illustrations, imparting a thorough knowledge of the language itself, the roots and derivations of English words, as well as those rules by which the language may be spoken and written grammatically.

MATHEMATICS AND ARITHMETIC, &c.

THE ELEMENTS OF GEOMETRY; or, the First Six Books, with the Eleventh and Twelfth, of Euclid. Edited by Professor WALLACE, A.M., of the Glasgow University, and Collegiate Tutor of the University of London. Price 1s. stiff covers, or 1s. 6d. cloth.

THE SELF AND CLASS EXAMINER IN EUCLID; containing the Enunciations of all the Propositions and Corollaries in Cassell's Edition. Price 3d., in a convenient size for the pocket.

CASSELL'S ELEMENTS OF ARITHMETIC; being a Companion to Cassell's "Euclid." Edited by Professor WALLACE, A.M. Price 1s. stiff covers, or 1s. 6d. cloth.

KEY TO CASSELL'S ARITHMETIC; containing Answers to all the Questions in the above Work. Price 3d., in a convenient size for the pocket.

The desirableness of such a Publication is too obvious to need remark. Even amongst those in whose heart the spirit of devotion is pure and ardent, a difficulty of expression, or a desire to avoid, day after day, the repetition of the same phrases while referring to common occurrences, acknowledging “every-day blessings,” or praying for their daily renewal, frequently produces considerable embarrassment; while others, as for instance, ladies in the absence of the head of the family—in consequence of nervousness or timidity, are prevented from leading the devotions of the household. To such persons the Altar of the Household will prove a valuable boon, whether used in the precise form in which it appears, or as suggesting a suitable train of thoughts and expressions. In these respects it may also greatly aid the private devotions of the closet. This Work is also obtainable in Twelve Parts, at 1s. each; cases for binding, 2s. each.

THE HISTORICAL TEXT-BOOK AND ATLAS OF BIBLICAL GEOGRAPHY.

By Lyman Coleman. With Maps, &c. Royal 8vo. Price, in cloth boards, 5s.; Plates, coloured, 6s.

The above Work is the result of an humble effort and an earnest desire to associate together the History and Geography of the Scriptures, and to allure the Young and assist them in an interested and intelligent perusal of the Book of God. Whatever may be the consideration in which this Text-Book may be held, we claim that the subject of it ought to have a place, not only in the Bible Class and Sunday School, but in the Grammar School, College, and Theological Seminary.

THE FAMILY NEW TESTAMENT;

with Comments and Instructions, References, Marginal Readings, and Maps. By the Rev. Justin Edwards, D.D. Demy 8vo. Price, in cloth boards, 5s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS WORKS.

MARY HOWITT’S ILLUSTRATED LIBRARY FOR THE YOUNG, as follows; published in Monthly Parts, price 6d. each:

1. Human Habitations.
5. Monkeys and their Profilés.
7. Moths and Butterflies.

Parents should let their children possess this Work, containing, as it does, an amount of interesting and instructive information, written
THE One Artis,
Engravings to 13s.
By binding the extensive illustrated plates, price 5s.; in handsome cloth, gilt edges, 6s. 6d.; with coloured plates, 7s. 6d.

BEAUTIFULLY-ILLUSTRATED WORKS,
Suitable for Presents, or the Drawing-room Table.

Lovers of Literature and the Fine Arts are particularly requested to observe that only a limited number of copies of the following magnificently illustrated Works remain on sale. They are not likely ever to be reprinted, in consequence of the great outlay involved in their reproduction.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF THE FEATHERED TRIBES. Illustrated by upwards of 300 Engravings in the first style of Art. In Imperial 8vo, price 12s. 6d. cloth boards, 13s. 6d. gilt edges.

The Preliminary Chapters, relating to the Structure, Incubation, Migration, and Classification of Birds, are followed by a full Account of THE RAPACIOUS BIRDS.

THE PERCHING BIRDS.
THE CLIMBING BIRDS.

It has been the aim, in the preparation of this Volume, to take as extensive a view of Birds as its limits would allow, and to do so according to a classification which may alike be easily understood and remembered. The wish of the Writer has been to combine the popular with the scientific, rendering them mutually subservient to the benefit of the Reader. This Work is also to be obtained in Ten 1s. Parts. Cases for binding the Volume, 2s.

In One splendid Volume, containing 640 pages, with upwards of 300 Engravings from Drawings by GILBERT, HARVEY, and other eminent Artists,

THE ALPS, SWITZERLAND, SAVOY, AND LOMBARDY.
By the Rev. CHARLES WILLIAMS. Price 12s. 6d. in cloth boards, or 13s. 6d. gilt edges.

This Work is also to be obtained in Ten 1s. Parts. Cases for binding the Volume, price 2s.
THE WORKS OF EMINENT MASTERS, Imperial 8vo., with about 500 choice Engravings. Bound in cloth, gilt edges, 13s.

The Proprietor is of opinion that this Work is a desideratum. Europe abounds with Galleries and Museums of Painting, Sculpture, and Fine Art; but many of them are as “fountains sealed” to the majority, or are only accessible at the expense of much form and ceremony, and a considerable portion of time. The contents of some of these Museums and Galleries have, it is true, been published, but at a price which places them beyond the reach of the mass of the people. The object of the Proprietor and Publisher of the WORKS OF EMINENT MASTERS is to supply this desideratum; and he rejoices that he has the means of placing within the reach of the humblest individual a Work of unparalleled beauty and excellence. His aim, in this enterprise, is to keep pace with the important movements recently made to beget and foster a love for the beautiful in Art; to place before the humble but aspiring Art-Student models which he may profitably imitate; and to encourage and stimulate the improved and improving taste of the present age. This Work is also obtainable in Numbers, at 3d.; and Parts, at 6d. each. Cases for binding, 2s. each.

THE ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF ART. The ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF ART is placed at the head of the Pictorial Publications of the age, both on account of the extent of its circulation and the beauty of its Illustrations. This very attractive Work is published at a price which places it within the reach of all classes of persons. In Three Volumes, Imperial 8vo., price 8s. 6d., elegantly bound, or with gilt edges, 9s. each Volume. This Work can be obtained in Numbers, at 3d. each, and in 1s. Parts. Cases for binding, at 2s.

It includes the following Departments, each of which is treated in a masterly manner:

1. Historical; including the most Remarkable Occurrences in the Histories of various Nations which admit of Pictorial Illustration.

2. Cosmographical.—This highly-interesting Department includes Descriptions of the Scenery and Productions of different Countries of the World, and the Customs and Manners of the Inhabitants.

3. Biographical; with Portraits of Eminent Individuals of various Periods and Countries, and Biographical Notices, obtained from authentic Sources.

4. Domestic.—This Department is enriched with Striking Scenes from Daily Life, and Passing Events and Occurrences.

5. Topographical; including Views of Public Edifices, Ecclesiastical Buildings, Private Mansions of architectural taste and picturesque beauty, &c.

6. Narrative.—Ably-written Tales and Narratives, with appropriate Illustrations.

7. Natural History; including Representations and Descriptions of what is most rare and curious in Zoology, Botany, &c., taken, in most instances, from real life.

8. MANUFACTURES AND ART INDUSTRY.—The vast range of subjects treated in this Department renders it peculiarly interesting. Various Manufacturing Processes and Scientific Inventions and Improvements are illustrated by numerous Diagrams, and explained in the most clear and practical manner.

9. Ladies' Department.—This portion of the Work is rendered peculiarly acceptable to Female Readers, as it is accompanied by a Series of Illustrations of the most novel and elegant designs in Embroidery and every kind of Needlework.

THE ILLUSTRATED EXHIBITOR AND MAGAZINE
OF ART. Imperial 8vo., with about 300 Engravings. In 2 Vols. Price per Vol., 6s. 6d. cloth; 7s. 6d. gilt edges; or the 2 Vols. in One, 12s. Admirably adapted for a Birthday Present. Vol. I., having been printed rather in excess, can be obtained in elegant paper boards, complete in itself, at the reduced price of 6s. This Work is also to be obtained in Numbers, at 2d.; and Parts, 9d. and 11d. Cases for Vols. 1. and II., price 1s. 6d., or for Double Volume, 2s.

THE ILLUSTRATED EXHIBITOR; or, Record of the Industrial Exhibition in Hyde Park, 1851. Cloth, 7s. 6d.; handsomely gilt, 8s. Persons wishing to have an artistic and interesting memorial of the Great World's Fair, should purchase this Work immediately, only a few Copies being left in print. This Work is also in Numbers, price 2d.; and Parts, price 9d. and 10d. Cases for binding the Volume, price 1s. 6d.

THE HISTORY OF THE PAINTERS OF ALL NATIONS.
By M. Charles Blanc, late "Directeur des Beaux Arts," of France. The Illustrations executed under the artistic direction of M. Archen- cage, of Paris. This Work contains upwards of 100 magnificent Engravings, illustrating the Spanish, Italian, French, Dutch, German, and Flemish Schools, with Portraits of the Painters. Fac-similes of their Handwriting, &c. In One splendid Volume, Royal 4to., price 30s.

A few Copies only of a cheaper Edition of the above, printed on the same paper, and bound in elegant cloth binding, gilt edges, and forming a beautiful Volume for the Drawing-room Table, &c., can be had, price 24s.

THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF HUNGARY AND THE MAGYARS.
By E. L. Godkin. With nearly 100 Engravings, handsomely bound in cloth, 5s. 6d. The aim of the Author of this Work has been to convey a clear idea of the nature and the origin of the late Revolution to the minds of those who have hitherto given but little attention to European politics.

Round and Gothic Waiters, Cake and Bread Baskets, equally low.

GAS CHANDELIERS AND BRACKETS.
The increased and increasing use of Gas in Private Houses has induced WILLIAM S. BURTON to collect from the various Manufacturers in Glass and Metal, all that is new and choice in Brackets, Pendants, and Chandeliers, adapted to offices, passages, and dwelling-rooms, as well as to have some designed expressly for him; these are now on show over his sixteen large rooms, and presents, for novelty, variety, and purity of taste, an unequalled appointment. They are marked in plain figures, at prices proportionate with those which have tended to make his Ironmongery Establishment the largest and most remarkable in the kingdom, viz., from 1s. 6d. (two-light), to £10 10s.

LAMPS OF ALL SORTS AND PATTERNS.
WILLIAM S. BURTON invites attention to his season's show of lamps. It embraces the Moderns (the best Parisian specimens of which have been carefully culled), Argand, Solar, Campinas, Palmer's Magnamus, and other Lamps for Candles; and comprises an assortment which, considered either as to extent, price, or pattern, is perfectly unrivalled.

Pryce's Oil, 9s. 6d. per gallon. Palmer's Candles, 9d., 9½d., and 10d. per lb.
Patent Camphine, 3s. 1d. per gallon.

The Alterations and Additions to these very extensive frames (already by far the largest in Europe), which have occupied the whole year, are now nearly completed; they are of such a character that the entire of eight houses is now devoted to the display of the most magnificent stock of general house ironmongery, (including Cutlery, Nickel Silver, Plated and Japaned Ware, Iron and Brass Bedsteads, and Bedding), arranged in sixteen large show rooms, so as to afford to parties furnishing facilities in the selection of goods that cannot be hoped for elsewhere.

Catalogues, with Engravings, sent (per post) free.
