ADVERTISEMENTS

PORTRAIT OF LADY FLORA HASTINGS, BEAUTIFULLY ENGRAVED BY FOXNER, FROM THE ONLY AUTHENTIC PICTURE OF THE FAMILY AT LOWESTOFT, BY WHOM PERMISSION THIS ENGRAVING HAS BEEN MADE. PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE. PROPERLY BOUND, PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE. LONDON: PUBLISHED BY W. AND R. FIDELON, 16 & 19, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, EMBNESS-SQUARE, AND SOLD ALSO BY EVERY RESPECTABLE PRINTSELLER IN THE KINGDOM.

PRIZE ESSAY.

Just published, in 4to size, Price 2s. 6d., an Essay on Poetry, by James Hemings, Esq., which obtained the Prize awarded by the Southwark Literary Society upon the adjudication of Sir Edward Lytton Bruce, Bart., M.P., on the following essay—"of just thoughts, of felicities conceived, and of elegant expression."—_Yearly Review._

"It conveys a very clear and critical view of the power and influence of poetry in softening and humanizing the mind, and affording it the highest purposes."—_Morning Herald._

"Mr. Hemings has much thought and thought clearly, and the result of his research and his reflection he has brought to bear upon his subject with excellent effect.ackson of language, force and logic of reasoning, and a logical arrangement of argument, and the characterisation of his essay, that "morality, is amative"—_London Review._

"The argument is ingenious and instructive, and火锅 in mind or undefined in feeling."—_Herald._

"In the essay before us the writer makes a splendid display of talent."—_Morning Advertiser._

Published by E. Hastings, Carey-street, Lincoln's-inn, and to be had at all Booksellers.

NEW WORKS.

In one volume, small octavo, price 1s. boards.

SKETCHES OF YOUNG COUPLES. With an urgent Remonstrance to the Gentlemen of England being Bachelors. By Mr. ROBSON CRUSADE. Published by the Author."Sketches of Young Gentlemen." With Six Illustrations by "Puzz." EIGHTH EDITION. In one volume, small octavo, price 1s. boards. 10th to a volume, small octavo, price 2s. 6d.

SKETCHES OF YOUNG LADIES. With Six Illustrations by "Puzz." FIFTH EDITION.

In one volume, small octavo, price 2s. boards.

THE HAND-BOOK OF SWINDLING. By the late Captain BANBURY WETZERIGHTER, late of the Royal Guard of His Majesty, King Charles, Treasurer of the British Whig and Vinegar Company, Trustee for the Franchise of the River Thames from Brunelleschi to Principal Inventor of Print-Book; Raaper of St. George's Fields; Original Patentee of the Parchment Conveyance Association; and Knight of every Order of the Empire. Bound in cloth, with gilt edges, price 2s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION. Corrected. In one volume royal 16mo, neatly bound, price 4s. 6d.

A PAPER—OF TOBACCO. With Additions. In one volume, small octavo, price 4s. 6d.

CHESS FOR BEGINNERS.

In a series of Progressive Lessons, showing the most approved method of Bookending and Ending the Game; together with various Solutions and Check Mate. By William Lewis. With Twenty-Four Engravings printed in colours.

And another Paper of Chess, of the same size, price 1s.

SONGS AND BALLADS.

By Samuel Lover. These popular Lyrics, including the collection on Compositions of the Family at Lowestoft, are now, for the first time, collected and revived by the Author. Chapman and Hall, 16th Strand.

THE BRITISH ANGLERS' MANUAL; or, the Art of Angling in England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland. With some account of the Principal Rivers, Lakes, and Trout Streams of the United Kingdom. Printed and Published by T. C. Howell, Esq, Price II. 2s. in post sv.; 16s. large paper, bound.

A few sets of India Proof Impressions of the Steel Plates, before letters, and of India impressions of the Wood Engravings, have been printed. Price One Guineas each set, in a portfolio.

"The most comprehensive work on Angling that has yet appeared in this country."—_Bell's Life in London._

"The work can hardly have a more eloquent or agreeable companion."—_Sporting Review._

In the press, and will be published in April 1814, dedicated, by express permission, to Her Majesty the Queen.

A GENERAL COLLECTION OF THE ANCIENT MUSIC OF IRELAND, consisting of upwards of One Hundred and Fifty Airs, in one vol., royal 8vo, comprising an enumeration of the principal Irish Melodies, which have been collected in various modes of ancient Irish musical Science, and the Technical Terms used by the Harpers; a Dissertation on the Antiquity and Characteristics of Irish Music and Musical Instruments; together with Biographical Memoirs of various eminent Harpers of later times, and Notices of the more remarkable Melodies and Pieces of the Collection; also, an account of the several efforts towards a revival of the use of the Harp in Ireland.

By Edward Bunting.

Hodges and Smith, Dublin—Orders for the work will be received by all Booksellers and Music-sellers in Great Britain and Ireland.

RIDING WHIPS from Is. each. The best London flax, or soft, 6d., 1s., 2s. 6d., with silver mounts, from 6s. 8d. to 1s. 6d., ditto ditto, chased silver, ditto from 9s., ditto ditto, chased good ditto , from 1l. to 12s., can be selected from a choice exhibited at the GOLDEN PEARL, 30, Strand. J. CREEK, Proprietor and Manufacturer. Messrs. H. and J. BERNHARD, and all Booksellers. All Orders from the Author. The most ornamental, and the only one that answers the several efforts towards a revival of the use of the Harp in Ireland.

BERNARD'S NEW LIGHT WATERPROOF FROCK.—Eighteen month's trial, and a very large sale, have fully established the merit of this Garment as a perfectly effectual protection from the rain, from the dew, or from any wetting, to which a person may be exposed under any of the several climates of the Austrian Empire. By W. Beek, by whom the New Waterproof Frock was first introduced, which renders all kinds of woollen cloth thoroughly water-proof without confining perspiration, or being in any respect objectionable, and for which no extra charge is now made. WALTER BERNARD, TAILOR, 69, CORNHL, NORTH SIDE.

A NEW DISCOVERY.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, begs to introduce a entirely NEW DESCRIPTION OF ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures, or STRAIGHTLY MODIFIED. They are perfectly joints; resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the original by the most critical observer; they will never change colour, or decay, and will be found very superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of the natural teeth, and is adapted for all cases, made only by W. Howard, by whom the New Artificial Teeth was first introduced, which renders all kinds of woollen cloth thoroughly water-proof without confining perspiration, or being in any respect objectionable, and for which no extra charge is now made. WALTER BERNARD, TAILOR, 69, CORNHEL, (North Side).
IGHT is generally my time for walking. In the summer I often leave home early in the morning, and roam about fields and lanes all day, or even escape for days or weeks together, but saving in the country I seldom go out until after dark, though, Heaven be thanked, I love its light and feel the cheerfulness it sheds upon the earth, as much as any creature living.

I have fallen insensibly into this habit, both because it favours my infirmity and because it affords me greater opportunity of speculating on the characters and occupations of those who fill the streets. The glare and hurry of broad noon are not adapted to idle pursuits like mine; a glimpse of passing faces caught by the light of a street lamp or a shop window is often better for my purpose than their full revelation in the daylight, and, if I must add the truth, night is kinder in this respect than day, which too often destroys an air-built castle at the moment of its completion, without the smallest ceremony or remorse.
That constant pacing to and fro, that never-ending restlessness, that incessant tread of feet wearing the rough stones smooth and glossy—is it not a wonder how the dwellers in narrow ways can bear to hear it! Think of a sick man in such a place as Saint Martin's court, listening to the footsteps, and in the midst of pain and weariness obliged, despite himself (as though it were a task he must perform) to detect the child's step from the man's, the slipshod beggar from the booted exquisite, the lounging from the busy, the dull heel of the sauntering outcast from the quick tread of an expectant pleasure-seeker—think of the hum and noise being always present to his senses, and of the stream of life that will not stop, pouring on, on, on, through all his restless dreams, as if he were condemned to lie dead but conscious, in a noisy churchyard, and had no hope of rest for centuries to come.

Then the crowds for ever passing and re-passing on the bridges (on those which are free of toll at least) where many stop on fine evenings looking listlessly down upon the water with some vague idea that by-and-by it runs between green banks which grow wider and wider until at last it joins the broad vast sea—where some halt from heavy loads and think as they look over the parapet that to smoke and lounge away one's life, and lie sleeping in the sun upon a hot tarpaulin, in a dull slow sluggish barge, must be happiness unalloyed—and where some, and a very different class, pause with heavier loads than they, remembering to have heard or read in some old time that drowning was not a hard death, but of all means of suicide the easiest and best. Covent Garden Market at sunrise too, in the spring or summer, when the fragrance of sweet flowers is in the air, overpowering even the unwholesome steams of last night's debauchery, and driving the dusky thrush, whose cage has hung outside a garret window all night long, half mad with joy! Poor bird! the only neighbouring thing at all akin to the other little captives, some of whom, shrinking from the hot hand of drunken purchasers, lie drooping on the path already, while others, saddened by close contact, await the time when they shall be watered and freshened up to please more sober company, and make old clerks who pass them on their road to business, wonder what has filled their breasts with visions of the country.

But my present purpose is not to expatiate upon my walks. An adventure which I am about to relate, and to which I shall recur at intervals, arose out of one of these rambles, and thus I have been led to speak of them by way of preface.

One night I had roamed into the city, and was walking slowly on m my usual way, musing upon a great many things, when I was arrested by an inquiry, the purport of which did not reach me, but which seemed to be addressed to myself, and was preferred in a soft sweet voice that struck me very pleasantly. I turned hastily round and found at my elbow a pretty little girl, who begged to be directed to a certain street at a considerable distance, and indeed in quite another quarter of the town.

"It is a very long way from here," said I, "my child."

"I know that, sir," she replied timidly. "I am afraid it is a very long way, for I came from there to-night."
"Alone?" said I, in some surprise.
"Oh yes, I don't mind that, but I am a little frightened now, for I had lost my road."
"And what made you ask it of me? Suppose I should tell you wrong."
"I am sure you will not do that," said the little creature, "you are such a very old gentleman, and walk so slow yourself."

I cannot describe how much I was impressed by this appeal and the energy with which it was made, which brought a tear into the child's clear eye, and made her slight figure tremble as she looked up into my face.

"Come," said I, "I'll take you there."

She put her hand in mine as confidingly as if she had known me from her cradle, and we trudged away together: the little creature accommodating her pace to mine, and rather seeming to lead and take care of me than I to be protecting her. I observed that every now and then she stole a curious look at my face as if to make quite sure that I was not deceiving her, and that these glances (very sharp and keen they were too) seemed to increase her confidence at every repetition.

For my part, my curiosity and interest were at least equal to the child's, for child she certainly was, although I thought it probable from what I could make out, that her very small and delicate frame imparted a peculiar youthfulness to her appearance. Though more scantily attired than she might have been she was dressed with perfect neatness, and betrayed no marks of poverty or neglect.

"Who has sent you so far by yourself?" said I.
"Somebody who is very kind to me, sir."
"And what have you been doing?"
"That, I must not tell," said the child firmly.

There was something in the manner of this reply which caused me to look at the little creature with an involuntary expression of surprise; for I wondered what kind of errand it might be that occasioned her to be prepared for questioning. Her quick eye seemed to read my thoughts, for as it met mine she added that there was no harm in what she had been doing, but it was a great secret—a secret which she did not even know herself.

This was said with no appearance of cunning or deceit, but with an unsuspicous frankness that bore the impress of truth. She walked on as before, growing more familiar with me as we proceeded and talking cheerfully by the way, but she said no more about her home, beyond remarking that we were going quite a new road and asking if it were a short one.

While we were thus engaged, I revolved in my mind a hundred different explanations of the riddle and rejected them every one. I really felt ashamed to take advantage of the ingenuousness or grateful feeling of the child for the purpose of gratifying my curiosity. I love these little people; and it is not a slight thing when they, who are so fresh from God, love us. As I had felt pleased at first by her confidence I determined to deserve it, and to do credit to the nature which had prompted her to repose it in me.

There was no reason, however, why I should refrain from seeing the person who had inconsiderately sent her so great a distance by night and alone.
and as it was not improbable that if she found herself near home she might take farewell of me and deprive me of the opportunity, I avoided the most frequented ways and took the most intricate, and thus it was not until we arrived in the street itself that she knew where we were. Clapping her hands with pleasure and running on before me for a short distance, my little acquaintance stopped at a door, and remaining on the step till I came up knocked at it when I joined her.

A part of this door was of glass unprotected by any shutter, which I did not observe at first, for all was very dark and silent within, and I was anxious (as indeed the child was also) for an answer to our summons. When she had knocked twice or thrice there was a noise as if some person were moving inside, and at length a faint light appeared through the glass which, as it approached very slowly, the bearer having to make his way through a great many scattered articles, enabled me to see both what kind of person it was who advanced and what kind of place it was through which he came.

It was a little old man with long grey hair, whose face and figure as he held the light above his head and looked before him as he approached, I could plainly see. Though much altered by age, I fancied I could recognise in his spare and slender form something of that delicate mould which I had noticed in the child. Their bright blue eyes were certainly alike, but his face was so deeply furrowed and so very full of care, that here all resemblance ceased.

The place through which he made his way at leisure was one of those receptacles for old and curious things which seem to crouch in odd corners of this town and to hide their musty treasures from the public eye in jealousy and distrust. There were suits of mail standing like ghosts in armour here and there, fantastic carvings brought from monkish cloisters, rusty weapons of various kinds, distorted figures in china and wood and iron and ivory: tapestry and strange furniture that might have been designed in dreams. The haggard aspect of the little old man was wonderfully suited to the place; he might have groped among old churches and tombs and deserted houses and gathered all the spoils with his own hands. There was nothing in the whole collection but was in keeping with himself; nothing that looked older or more worn than he.

As he turned the key in the lock, he surveyed me with some astonishment which was not diminished when he looked from me to my companion. The door being opened, the child addressed him as grandfather, and told him the little story of our companionship.

"Why bless thee child" said the old man patting her on the head, "how couldst thou miss thy way—what if I had lost thee Nell!"

"I would have found my way back to you, grandfather," said the child boldly; "never fear."

The old man kissed her, and then turning to me and begging me to walk in, I did so. The door was closed and locked. Proceeding me with the light, he led me through the place I had already seen from without, into a small sitting room behind, in which was another door opening into a kind of closet, where I saw a little bed that a fairy might have slept in, it looked so very small and was so prettily arranged. The child took a candle and tripped into this little room, leaving the old man and me together.

"You must be tired, sir," said he as he placed a chair near the fire, "how can I thank you?"

"By taking more care of your grandchild another time, my good friend," I replied.

"More care!" said the old man in a shrill voice, "more care of Nelly! why who ever loved a child as I love Nell?"

He said this with such evident surprise that I was perplexed what answer to make, and the more so because coupled with something feeble and wondering in his manner, there were in his face marks of deep and anxious thought which convinced me that he could not be, as I had been at first inclined to suppose, in a state of dotage or imbecility.

"I don't think you consider—" I began

"I don't consider!" cried the old man interrupting me, "I don't consider her! ah how little you know of the truth. Little Nelly, little Nelly!"

It would be impossible for any man, I care not what his form of speech might be, to express more affection than the dealer in curiosities did, in these four words. I waited for him to speak again, but he rested his chin upon his hand and shaking his head twice or thrice fixed his eyes upon the fire.

While we were sitting thus in silence, the door of the closet opened, and the child returned, her light brown hair hanging loose about her neck, and her face flushed with the haste she had made to rejoin us. She busied herself immediately in preparing supper, and while she was thus engaged I remarked that the old man took an opportunity of observing me more closely than he had done yet. I was surprised to see that all this time everything was done by the child, and that there appeared to be no other persons but ourselves in the house. I took advantage of a moment when she was absent to venture a hint on this point, to which the old man replied that there were few grown persons as trustworthy or as careful as she.

"It always grieves me" I observed, roused by what I took to be his selfishness, "it always grieves me to contemplate the initiation of children into the ways of life, when they are scarcely more than infants. It checks their confidence and simplicity—two of the best qualities that Heaven gives them—and demands that they share our sorrows before they are capable of entering into our enjoyments."

"It will never check hers," said the old man looking steadily at me, "the springs are too deep. Besides, the children of the poor know but few pleasures. Even the cheap delights of childhood must be bought and paid for."

"But—forgive me for saying this—you are surely not so very poor"—said I.

"She is not my child, sir," returned the old man. "Her mother was, and she was poor. I save nothing—not a penny—though I live as you see, but"—he laid his hand upon my arm and bent forward to whisper "She shall be rich one of these days, and a fine lady. Don't you think ill of me, because I use her help. She gives it cheerfully as you see, and it would break her heart if she knew that I suffered anybody else to do for me what her little hands could undertake. I don’t consider!"—he cried with sudden querulousness, "why, God knows that this one child is the thought and object of my life, and yet he never prospers—no, never."

At this juncture, the subject of our conversation again returned, and the old man motioning to me to approach the table, broke off, and said no more.

We had scarcely begun our repast when there was a knock at the door by which I had entered, and Nell bursting into a hearty laugh, which I was rejoiced to hear, for it was childlike and full of hilarity, said it was no doubt dear old Kit come back at last.

"Foolish Nell!" said the old man fondling with her hair. "She always laughs at poor Kit."

The child laughed again more heartily than before, and I could not help smiling from pure sympathy. The little old man took up a candle and went to open the door. When he came back, Kit was at his heels.

Kit was a shock-headed shambling awkward lad with an uncommonly wide mouth, very red cheeks, a turned-up nose, and certainly the most comical expression of face I ever saw. He stopped short at the door on seeing a stranger, twirled in his hand a perfectly round old hat without any vestige of a brim, and resting himself now on one leg and now on the other and changing them constantly, stood in the doorway, looking into the parlour with the most extraordinary leer I ever beheld. I entertained a grateful feeling towards the boy from that minute, for I felt that he was the comedy of the child’s life.

"A long way, wasn’t it, Kit?" said the little old man.

"Why then, it was a goodish stretch, master," returned Kit.

"Did you find the house easily?"

"Why then, not over and above easy, master," said Kit.

"Of course you have come back hungry?"

"Why then, I do consider myself rather so, master" was the answer.

The lad had a remarkable manner of standing sideways as he spoke, and thrusting his head forward over his shoulder, as if he could not get at his voice without that accompanying action. I think he would have amused one anywhere, but the child’s exquisite enjoyment of his oddity, and the relief it was to find that there was something she associated with merriment in a place that appeared so unsuited to her, were quite irresistible. It was a great point too that Kit himself was flattered by the sensation he created, and after several efforts to preserve his gravity, burst into a loud roar, and so stood with his mouth wide open and his eyes nearly shut, laughing violently.

The old man had again relapsed into his former abstraction and took no notice of what passed, but I remarked that when her laugh was over, the child’s bright eyes were dimmed with tears, called forth by the fulness of heart with which she welcomed her uncouth favourite after the little anxiety of the night. As for Kit himself (whose laugh had been all the time one of that sort which very little would change into a cry) he carried a large slice of bread and meat and a mug of beer into a corner, and applied himself to disposing of them with great voracity.

"Ah!" said the old man turning to me with a sigh as if I had spoken to him but that moment, " you don't know what you say when you tell me that I don't consider her."

" You must not attach too great weight to a remark founded on first appearances, my friend, " said I.

" No," returned the old man thoughtfully, " no. Come hither Nell."

The little girl hastened from her seat, and put her arm about his neck.

" Do I love thee, Nell? " said he. " Say—do I love thee, Nell, or no?"

The child only answered by her caresses, and laid her head upon his breast.

" Why dost thou sob," said the grandfather pressing her closer to him and glancing towards me. " Is it because thou know'st I love thee, and dost not like that I should seem to doubt it by my question? Well, well—then let us say I love thee dearly."

" Indeed, indeed you do," replied the child with great earnestness, " Kit knows you do."

Kit, who in despatching his bread and meat had been swallowing two thirds of his knife at every mouthful with the coolness of a juggler, stopped short in his operations on being thus appealed to, and bawled " Nobody isn't such a fool as to say he doesn't. " after which he incapacitated himself for further conversation by taking a most prodigious sandwich at one bite.

" She is poor now"—said the old man patting the child's cheek, " but I say again that the time is coming when she shall be rich. It has been a long time coming, but it must come at last: a very long time, but it surely must come. It has come to other men who do nothing but waste and riot. When will it come to me!"

" I am very happy as I am grandfather," said the child.

" Tush, tush! " returned the old man, " thou dost not know—how should'st thou?" Then he muttered again between his teeth, " The time must come, I am very sure it must. It will be all the better for coming late; " and then he sighed and fell into his former musing state, and still holding the child between his knees appeared to be insensible to everything around him. By this time it wanted but a few minutes of midnight and I rose to go, which recalled him to himself.

" One moment, sir," he said. " Now Kit—near midnight, boy, and you still here! Get home, get home, and be true to your time in the morning, for there's work to do. Good night! There, bid him good night Nell and let him be gone!"

" Good night Kit " said the child, her eyes lighting up with merriment and kindness.

" Good night Miss Nell " returned the boy.

" And thank this gentleman," interposed the old man, " but for whose care I might have lost my little girl to-night."

" No, no, master," said Kit, " that won't do, that won't."

" What do you mean! " cried the old man.

" I'd have found her master," said Kit, " I'd have found her. I'd bet that I'd find her if she was above ground, I would, as quick as anybody master. Ha ha ha!"
Once more opening his mouth and shutting his eyes, and laughing like a stentor, Kit gradually backed to the door, and roared himself out.

Free of the room the boy was not slow in taking his departure; when he had gone and the child was occupied in clearing the table, the old man said:

"I haven't seemed to thank you sir enough for what you have done to-night, but I do thank you humbly and heartily, and so does she, and her thanks are better worth than mine. I should be sorry that you went away and thought I was unmindful of your goodness, or careless of her—I am not indeed."

I was sure of that, I said, from what I had seen. "But," I added, "may I ask you a question?"

"Ay sir," replied the old man, "what is it?"

"This delicate child," said I, "with so much beauty and intelligence—has she nobody to care for her but you, has she no other companion or adviser?"

"No," he returned looking anxiously in my face, "no, and she wants no other."

"But are you not fearful" said I "that you may misunderstand a charge so tender! I am sure you mean well, but are you quite certain that you know how to execute such a trust as this? I am an old man, like you, and I am actuated by an old man's concern in all that is young and promising. Do you not think that what I have seen of you and this little creature to-night must have an interest not wholly free from pain?"

"Sir" rejoined the old man after a moment's silence, "I have no right to feel hurt at what you say. It is true that in many respects I am the child, and she the grown person—that you have seen already. But waking or sleeping, by night or day, in sickness or health, she is the one object of my care, and if you knew of how much care, you would look on me with different eyes, you would indeed. Ah! it's a weary life for an old man—a weary, weary, life—but there is a great end to gain and that I keep before me."

Seeing that he was in a state of excitement and impatience, I turned to put on an outer coat which I had thrown off on entering the room, purposing to say no more. I was surprised to see the child standing patiently by with a cloak upon her arm, and in her hand a hat and stick.

"Those are not mine, my dear," said I.

"No," returned the child quietly, "they are grandfather's."

"But he is not going out to-night."

"Oh yes he is" said the child, with a smile.

"And what becomes of you, my pretty one?"

"Me! I stay here of course. I always do."

I looked in astonishment towards the old man, but he was, or feigned to be, busied in the arrangement of his dress. From him I looked back to the slight gentle figure of the child. Alone! In that gloomy place all the long, dreary night! She evinced no consciousness of my surprise, but cheerfully helped the old man with his cloak, and when he was ready took a candle to light us out. Finding that we did not follow as she expected, she looked back with a smile and waited for us. The old man showed by his face that he plainly understood the cause of my hesitation, but he merely signed to me with an inclination of the head to pass out of the room before him, and remained silent. I had no resource but to comply.

When we reached the door, the child setting down the candle, turned to say good night and raised her face to kiss me. Then she ran to the old man, who folded her in his arms and bade God bless her.

"Sleep soundly Nell," he said in a low voice, "and angels guard thy bed. Do not forget thy prayers, my sweet."

"No indeed," answered the child fervently, "they make me feel so happy!"

"That's well; I know they do; they should," said the old man. "Bless thee a hundred times. Early in the morning I shall be home."

"You'll not ring twice," returned the child. "The bell wakes me, even in the middle of a dream."

With this, they separated. The child opened the door (now guarded by a shutter which I had heard the boy put up before he left the house) and with another farewell whose clear and tender note I have recalled a thousand times, held it until we had passed out. The old man paused a moment while it was gently closed and fastened on the inside, and satisfied that this was done, walked on at a slow pace. At the street-corner he stepped, and regarding me with a troubled countenance said that our ways were widely different and that he must take his leave. I would have spoken, but summoning up more alacrity than might have been expected in one of his appearance, he hurried away.

I could see that twice or thrice he looked back as if to ascertain if I were still watching him, or perhaps to assure himself that I was not following at a distance. The obscurity of the night favoured his disappearance, and his figure was soon beyond my sight.

I remained standing on the spot where he had left me, unwilling to depart, and yet unknowing why I should loiter there. I looked wistfully into the street we had lately quitted, and after a time directed my steps that way. I passed and repassed the house, and stopped and listened at the door; all was dark, and silent as the grave.

Yet I lingered about, and could not tear myself away, thinking of all possible harm that might happen to the child—of fires and robberies and even murder—and feeling as if some evil must ensue if I turned my back upon the place. The closing of a door or window in the street brought me before the curiosity-dealer's once more; I crossed the road and looked up at the house to assure myself that the noise had not come from there. No, it was black, cold, and lifeless as before.

There were few passengers astir; the street was sad and dismal, and pretty well my own. A few stragglers from the theatres hurried by, and now and then I turned aside to avoid some noisy drunkard as he reeled homewards, but these interruptions were not frequent and soon ceased. The clocks struck one. Still I paced up and down, promising myself that every time should be the last, and breaking faith with myself on some new plea as often as I did so.

The more I thought of what the old man had said, and of his looks and bearing, the less I could account for what I had seen and heard. I had a strong misgiving that his nightly absence was for no good purpose. I had only come to know the fact through the innocence of the child, and though the old man was by at the time and saw my undisguised surprise, he had preserved a strange mystery upon the subject and offered no word of explanation.

MASTER HUMPHREY'S CLOCK.
These reflections naturally recalled again more strongly than before his haggard face, his wandering manner, his restless anxious looks. His affection for the child might not be inconsistent with villainy of the worst kind; even that very affection was in itself an extraordinary contradiction, or how could he leave her thus? Disposed as I was to think badly of him, I never doubted that his love for her was real. I could not admit the thought, remembering what had passed between us, and the tone of voice in which he had called her by her name.

"Stay here of course" the child had said in answer to my question, "I always do!" What could take him from home by night, and every night?
I called up all the strange tales I had ever heard of dark and secret deeds committed in great towns and escaping detection for a long series of years; wild as many of these stories were, I could not find one adapted to this mystery, which only became the more impenetrable, in proportion as I sought to solve it.

Occupied with such thoughts as these, and a crowd of others all tending to the same point, I continued to pace the street for two long hours; at length the rain began to descend heavily, and then overpowered by fatigue though no less interested than I had been at first, I engaged the nearest coach and so got home. A cheerful fire was blazing on the hearth, the lamp burnt brightly.
my clock received me with its old familiar welcome; everything was quiet warm and cheering; and in happy contrast to the gloom and darkness I had quitted.
But all that night, waking or in my sleep, the same thoughts recurred and the same images retained possession of my brain. I had ever before me the old dark murky rooms—the gaunt suits of mail with their ghostly silent air—the faces all awry, grinning from wood and stone—the dust and rust and worm that lives in wood—and alone in the midst of all this lumber and decay and ugly age, the beautiful child in her gentle slumber, smiling through her light and sunny dreams.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Master Humphrey has been favoured with the following letter, written on strongly-scented paper, and sealed in light blue wax with the representation of two very plump doves, interchanging beaks. It does not commence with any of the usual forms of address, but begins as is here set forth.

Bath, Wednesday Night.

Heavens! into what an indiscretion do I suffer myself to be betrayed! To address these faltering lines to a total stranger, and that stranger one of a conflicting sex!—and yet I am precipitated into the abyss, and have no power of self snatchation (forgive me if I coin that phrase) from the yawning gulf before me.

Yes, I am writing to a man, but let me not think of that, for madness is in the thought. You will understand my feelings? Oh yes! I am sure you will! and you will respect them too, and not despise them—will you?

Let me be calm. That portrait—smiling as once he smiled on me—that cane dangling as I have seen it dangle from his hand I know not how oft—those legs that have glided through my nightly dreams and never stopped to speak—the perfectly gentlemanly though false original—can I be mistaken? oh no no.

Let me be calmer yet; I would be calm as coffins. You have published a letter from one whose likeness is engraved, but whose name (and wherefore?) is suppressed. Shall I breathe that name! Is it—but why ask when my heart tells me too truly that it is!

I would not upbraid him with his treachery, I would not remind him of those times when he plighted the most eloquent of vows, and procured from me a small pecuniary accommodation—and yet I would see him—see him did I say—him—alas! such is woman’s nature. For as the poet beautifully says—but you will already have anticipated the sentiment. Is it not sweet? oh yes!

It was in this city (hallowed by the recollection) that I met him first, and assuredly if mortal happiness be recorded anywhere, then those rubbers with their three-and-sixpenny points are scored on tablets of celestial brass. He always held an honour—generally two. On that eventful night, we stood at eight. He raised his eyes (luminous in their seductive sweetness) to my agitated face. "Can you?" said he, with peculiar meaning. I felt the gentle pressure of his foot on mine; our corns throbbed in unison. "Can you?" he said again, and every lineament of his expressive countenance added the words "resist me?" I murmured "No," and fainted.

They said when I recovered, it was the weather. I said it was the nutmeg in the negus. How little did they suspect the truth! How little did they guess the deep mysterious meaning of that inquiry! He called next morning on his knees—I do not mean to say that he actually came in that position to the house door, but that he went down upon those joints directly the servant had retired. He brought some verses in his hat which he said were original, but which I have since found were Milton's. Likewise a little bottle labelled laudanum: also a pistol and a swordstick. He drew the latter, uncocked the former, and clicked the trigger of the pocket fire-arm. He had come, he said, to conquer or to die. He did not die. He wrested from me an avowal of my love, and let off the pistol out of a back window previous to partaking of a slight repast.

Faithless, inconstant man! How many ages seem to have elapsed since his unaccountable and perfidious disappearance! Could I still forgive him both that and the borrowed larceny that he promised to pay next week! Could I spurn him from my feet if he approached in penitence, and with a matrimonial object! Would the blandishing enchanter still weave his spells around me, or should I burst them all and turn away in coldness! I dare not trust my weakness with the thought.

My brain is in a whirl again. You know his address, his occupation, his mode of life, are acquainted perhaps with his inmost thoughts. You are a humane and philanthropic character—reveal all you know—all; but especially the street and number of his lodgings. The post is departing, the bellman rings—pray Heaven it be not the knell of joy and hope to BELINDA.

P.S. Pardon the wanderings of a bad pen and a distracted mind. Address to the Post-office. The bellman rendered impatient by delay is ringing dreadfully in the passage.

P.P.S. I open this to say that the bellman is gone and that you must not expect it till the next post, so don't be surprised when you don't get it.

Master Humphrey does not feel himself at liberty to furnish his fair correspondent with the address of the gentleman in question, but he publishes her letter as a public appeal to his faith and gallantry.
ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO ANGLERS.—Best Fly Rods with two tops, 6c. 9s.; 4 joint Walking-stick Rods, 6c. 9s.; 4 joint Walking-stick Rods, £1 1s.; 4 joint Walking-stick Rods, £1 10s.; 4 joint Walking-stick Rods, £2 10s. Lord's, Soho, London. £12½ the best kind.—The price of the several kinds, † with application at the GOLDEN FERRET, 92, Strand. J. CHEER, Proprietor.

VITAL AIR.—Restorative after fatigue and depression, highly remedial in Asthma, Debility, and failure of the Vital powers of the system. A most important discovery. The principal properties of which recommend them for the general use of this grateful and extensively elaborated beverage, manufactured by H. BAYLEY, & Son, Wholesale and Retail, 55, Houndsditch, Bow, London. For sale by Bayley & Co., Bond-street; Bell, Oxford-street; Butler, Chaudière & Priestly & Taylor, Godfrey & Cooke, Monmouth, Hambro, Gifford, and the first Chemists in the kingdom. Where a very extensive variety may always be seen.

BETROTT'S POWDERS, price 13d. per Packet. A valuable Substantive that should be kept in every Room and Nursery, ready for sudden illness, and the best medicine for Worms, Colds, and Children's Sore Throat. Sold by Bayley, & Son, Houndsditch, Bow. London, and by all druggists, gents’ outfitters, and other drapers.

NEW AND VERY POWERFUL GALVANIC BATTERY. Specially adapted to the arrangements of the Electricians, for Art of Drawing, &c., price 5s, 7s, 9s., 6d, and upwards.

CORNBS AND BUNIONS.

PAUL'S EVERY MAN'S FRIEND is a speedily and sure cure for those painful annoyances, without cutting or pain. Acting under the special recommendation of one of the gentle sex; resting upon relief, and entirely curing the complaint. For sale, in boxes at 1s. 1d. or three in one for 2s. 6d. to worshippers and residents of the metropolis, and all 2s. 6d. to be had of C. King, 17, Whitechapel-street; and all 2s. 6d. to be had of J. Fox on the Ramp. A 2s. 6d. box cures the most obdurate Corn.

ASK FOR PAUL'S EVERY MAN'S FRIEND.

CHEMISTRY AND NATURAL PHILOSOPHY.—Parents and Friends of Youth desiring instruction in the principles of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy are respectfully informed that young friends, to partake of the above valuable and highly interesting Science, and to receive a correct and complete knowledge of its general use and technical application, are now equally applied in the Arts and Manufactures, will find that nothing is so likely to succeed as that of teaching them the principles and methods of this Science, which may now be had at a moderate expense, at the establishment of E. PALMER, 10, Newgate-street, London, where a very extensive variety may always be seen.

AMESBURY'S PATENT BODY SUPPORTS. These supports are used instead of Stays and Corsets, and are indispensible in the natural form and development of the Body. When the PATENT BODY SUPPORTS are used for the ordinary purposes for which Stays and Corsets are employed, they afford equal, if not greater, support to the Body, and at the same time exert a preserving influence, tending greatly to retard the growth of Spine and Back, and to prevent unnatural swelling of the Anatomic. They previously here so as to produce a crawling action directly to the effect of the Spine, to its benefit. They are made in various qualities to suit the various conditions of the Body in the single and married state.—Imported by JOSIAH AMESBURY, Surgeon, London, M.R.C.S., &c., late Lecturer on Orthopaedic Surgery, &c., now Manufacturer. Apparatus and Support are regularly applied to the Treatment of Fractures, of the Spine, of Fractures, of the Patella, and of the Fistula of the Spine, &c., and by the use of that of the many advantages, which are now applied in the arts and manufactures, and which are now equally applied in the arts and manufactures, where they may be had of C. White, 61, Victoria Works, Graham-street, &c., and are regularly increasing in number. At the establishment of E. PALMER, 10, Newgate-street, London, where they may be had of C. White, 61, Victoria Works, Graham-street, &c., and are regularly increasing in number.

COMFORT FOR TENDER FEET, &c., WELSTON STREET, STRAND, LONDON.

HALL & CO. SOLE PATENTEES OF THE FASHIONS, COULIS, OR LONDON BOOTS AND SHOES, for Ladies and Gentlemen. These articles have been the object of attention, and are regularly worn by them. They are manufactured at Hammersmith, Brompton, &c., and are more comfortable and more numerous in many cases, than any other made, and as they are worn with great care, they never wear the feet or get hard, but are very durable, adapted to each climate or atmosphere, and resemble the finest Leather, and are covered with common Blacking. Merchants and others will find the above article invaluable for warm climates. —Their India Rubbers, are of particular use for their lightness and winter-proof quality.

BURTLE'S VEGETABLE TOOTH POWDER has been so long in use, and is a substitute for the Cofleamie, that this substitute, importable by J. BURTLE, Surgeon, London, is made in ever so many cases, that it is sure to succeed. It is employed for the removal of all Dentures, and for the preservation of the teeth. It is also an excellent Powder for the teeth, and is used regularly with the utmost success. It is made and sold by E. PALMER, 10, Newgate-street, London, and may be obtained from him.

ANNUAL PRICE being engraved in the accompanying stamps and labels of most respectable Druggists and Perfumers in the United Kingdom, in 2s. 6d. boxes.

PROCTER'S INDIAN RUBBER.
BEARDS PATENT PNEUMATIC COFFEE FILTER.

The principle of this beautiful invention is allowed, by all Hupers and Mechanics, to surpass that of any other Filter ever offered to the public. The simplicity of its construction enables the most ignorant servant to use it, without trouble. A Filter of Coffee surpassing, in richness of color and flavor, the most magnificent wares of the greatest eminence to advertise. We have invented a great deal of the luxury of the Coffee introduced after dinner by the French, without troubling their black Coffee may be made by this invention, and the Coffee being made by Infusions, the aroma only is extracted, and the steam and moisture parts remain in the grounds. It is well known that, that, from the first introduction of Coffee, the only preventive to its general use has been the difficulty of making it. Various means have been adopted—Patents have been taken for Filters—Percolators have been introduced—all have failed—some from failing in producing a scientific person to use them, others from the want of appearance of the process in making the Coffee and the circumstances of its being nearly cold when brought to table. The Patentee, without hesitation, submitted his invention to the Mechanics Section of the British Association, at their late meeting in Birmingham. He was honoured by the thanks of that scientific body, and had the satisfaction of hearing it stated by them, that his invention surpasses any other great simplicity, nothing tiring and before, anything else and he has been every respect adopted for general use. The article has now been before the public more than six Months, and

BEARDS PATENT PNEUMATIC COFFEE FILTER.

The principle of this beautiful invention is allowed, by all Hypers and Mechanics, to surpass that of any other Filter ever offered to the public. The simplicity of its construction enables the most ignorant servant to use it, without trouble. A Filter of Coffee surpassing, in richness of color and flavor, the most magnificent wares of the greatest eminence to advertise. We have invented a great deal of the luxury of the Coffee introduced after dinner by the French, without troubling their black Coffee may be made by this invention, and the Coffee being made by Infusions, the aroma only is extracted, and the steam and moisture parts remain in the grounds. It is well known that, that, from the first introduction of Coffee, the only preventive to its general use has been the difficulty of making it. Various means have been adopted—Patents have been taken for Filters—Percolators have been introduced—all have failed—some from failing in producing a scientific person to use them, others from the want of appearance of the process in making the Coffee and the circumstances of its being nearly cold when brought to table. The Patentee, without hesitation, submitted his invention to the Mechanics Section of the British Association, at their late meeting in Birmingham. He was honoured by the thanks of that scientific body, and had the satisfaction of hearing it stated by them, that his invention surpasses any other great simplicity, nothing tiring and before, anything else and he has been every respect adopted for general use. The article has now been before the public more than six Months, and

BEARDS PATENT PNEUMATIC COFFEE FILTER.

The principle of this beautiful invention is allowed, by all Hypers and Mechanics, to surpass that of any other Filter ever offered to the public. The simplicity of its construction enables the most ignorant servant to use it, without trouble. A Filter of Coffee surpassing, in richness of color and flavor, the most magnificent wares of the greatest eminence to advertise. We have invented a great deal of the luxury of the Coffee introduced after dinner by the French, without troubling their black Coffee may be made by this invention, and the Coffee being made by Infusions, the aroma only is extracted, and the steam and moisture parts remain in the grounds. It is well known that, that, from the first introduction of Coffee, the only preventive to its general use has been the difficulty of making it. Various means have been adopted—Patents have been taken for Filters—Percolators have been introduced—all have failed—some from failing in producing a scientific person to use them, others from the want of appearance of the process in making the Coffee and the circumstances of its being nearly cold when brought to table. The Patentee, without hesitation, submitted his invention to the Mechanics Section of the British Association, at their late meeting in Birmingham. He was honoured by the thanks of that scientific body, and had the satisfaction of hearing it stated by them, that his invention surpasses any other great simplicity, nothing tiring and before, anything else and he has been every respect adopted for general use. The article has now been before the public more than six Months, and

BEARDS PATENT PNEUMATIC COFFEE FILTER.

The principle of this beautiful invention is allowed, by all Hypers and Mechanics, to surpass that of any other Filter ever offered to the public. The simplicity of its construction enables the most ignorant servant to use it, without trouble. A Filter of Coffee surpassing, in richness of color and flavor, the most magnificent wares of the greatest eminence to advertise. We have invented a great deal of the luxury of the Coffee introduced after dinner by the French, without troubling their black Coffee may be made by this invention, and the Coffee being made by Infusions, the aroma only is extracted, and the steam and moisture parts remain in the grounds. It is well known that, that, from the first introduction of Coffee, the only preventive to its general use has been the difficulty of making it. Various means have been adopted—Patents have been taken for Filters—Percolators have been introduced—all have failed—some from failing in producing a scientific person to use them, others from the want of appearance of the process in making the Coffee and the circumstances of its being nearly cold when brought to table. The Patentee, without hesitation, submitted his invention to the Mechanics Section of the British Association, at their late meeting in Birmingham. He was honoured by the thanks of that scientific body, and had the satisfaction of hearing it stated by them, that his invention surpasses any other great simplicity, nothing tiring and before, anything else and he has been every respect adopted for general use. The article has now been before the public more than six Months, and

BEARDS PATENT PNEUMATIC COFFEE FILTER.

The principle of this beautiful invention is allowed, by all Hypers and Mechanics, to surpass that of any other Filter ever offered to the public. The simplicity of its construction enables the most ignorant servant to use it, without trouble. A Filter of Coffee surpassing, in richness of color and flavor, the most magnificent wares of the greatest eminence to advertise. We have invented a great deal of the luxury of the Coffee introduced after dinner by the French, without troubling their black Coffee may be made by this invention, and the Coffee being made by Infusions, the aroma only is extracted, and the steam and moisture parts remain in the grounds. It is well known that, that, from the first introduction of Coffee, the only preventive to its general use has been the difficulty of making it. Various means have been adopted—Patents have been taken for Filters—Percolators have been introduced—all have failed—some from failing in producing a scientific person to use them, others from the want of appearance of the process in making the Coffee and the circumstances of its being nearly cold when brought to table. The Patentee, without hesitation, submitted his invention to the Mechanics Section of the British Association, at their late meeting in Birmingham. He was honoured by the thanks of that scientific body, and had the satisfaction of hearing it stated by them, that his invention surpasses any other great simplicity, nothing tiring and before, anything else and he has been every respect adopted for general use. The article has now been before the public more than six Months, and

BEARDS PATENT PNEUMATIC COFFEE FILTER.

The principle of this beautiful invention is allowed, by all Hypers and Mechanics, to surpass that of any other Filter ever offered to the public. The simplicity of its construction enables the most ignorant servant to use it, without trouble. A Filter of Coffee surpassing, in richness of color and flavor, the most magnificent wares of the greatest eminence to advertise. We have invented a great deal of the luxury of the Coffee introduced after dinner by the French, without troubling their black Coffee may be made by this invention, and the Coffee being made by Infusions, the aroma only is extracted, and the steam and moisture parts remain in the grounds. It is well known that, that, from the first introduction of Coffee, the only preventive to its general use has been the difficulty of making it. Various means have been adopted—Patents have been taken for Filters—Percolators have been introduced—all have failed—some from failing in producing a scientific person to use them, others from the want of appearance of the process in making the Coffee and the circumstances of its being nearly cold when brought to table. The Patentee, without hesitation, submitted his invention to the Mechanics Section of the British Association, at their late meeting in Birmingham. He was honoured by the thanks of that scientific body, and had the satisfaction of hearing it stated by them, that his invention surpasses any other great simplicity, nothing tiring and before, anything else and he has been every respect adopted for general use. The article has now been before the public more than six Months, and