ELEGANT PRESENTS FOR TOWN AND COUNTRY.

Edward Lacey having bought the whole of the remaining copies of the following list, offers them at one-fifth their published price; they are all with the best impressions of the plates, and handsomely bound and gilt.

THE AMARANTH; embellished with numerous beautiful Steel Plates, and bound in embossed red gilt, &c., edited by R. Rosenh., Esq., now only Four Shillings.

THE CABIN SPECULATIONS, embellished with Steel Engravings, and handsomely bound in red arabesque rose, gilt, &c., &c.

THE WREATH OF FRIENDSHIP; edited by Charles C. Illustrated with fine Plates, beautifully bound in embossed crimson satin, gilt, &c., &c.

THE LADY'S KEYSCAPE. This is a delightful book, and worthy a place in every female's library. A most decorative volume, hardly to be imagined, viewed as a source of love or parental affection, or as a gift of respect and esteem. It must be regarded as most appropriate and acceptable. It is handsomely bound in embossed silk, neatly gilt and ornamented, only Four Shillings.

THE REMINISCENCE, edited by Thomas Rosenh., Esq., with many beautiful Plates, by Miss Mitchell, Mrs. Haywood, Mary Howitt, J. Montgomery, the Etrick Shepherd, Miss Porter, Dr. Bowring, Mrs. Hemans, &c. Elegantly bound in arabesque morocco, gilt, with beautiful Meet Plates, &c., &c.

THE MAGNET OF LITERATURE ATTRACTION, and embellished with many super fine Engravings, and bound in arabesque morocco, handsomely gilt, &c., &c.

THE BOUQUET; an elegant Present, comprises a new edition, enlarged and illustrated, &c., &c., &c., &c.

THE CURIOUS NATURAL HISTORY. With 810 Engravings, containing the most exquisite steel engravings, large and small, with many beautiful Steel Plates, and bound in red morocco, gilt, &c., &c.

The Offering, a Tribute of Friendship and Affection; beautifully bound in embossed crimson rose, gilt, &c., &c.

The Gem, edited by George Emerson, Esq., aided by contrivances from numerous talented writers; embellished with many fine Plates, and hand bound, and gilt, &c., &c.

The Amulet, an elegant Literary Present; handsomely bound in silk or morocco, richly gilt and embellished with many fine Plates on Ornament, Science, &c., &c.

The Talisman, or English Keepsake, large size,avo. Illustrated with many fine Engravings, containing a new edition, with many contributions from the most eminent Authors, &c., &c. It is calculated for an elegant present, or handsome volume for drawing room reading, &c., &c., &c. Engraved, bound splendidly, gilt, &c., &c., only £5, one quarter published price.

The Cabinet Keepsake, which contains the whole of the Keepsakes, with numerous fine plates on Steel, and a super collection of specimens of natural history, literature, &c., &c., &c., handsomely bound in red embossed silk, gilt, &c., &c., now only Five Shillings each.

The Anniversary, a beautiful book of Plates, Illustrating contributory Tales by the best male and female writers of the present day, intended as a commemorative present for the yearly Souvenir of Wedding and Birthday Days, &c., &c., &c., &c., &c., &c., &c., &c.

The Return Souvenir of Intelligence, Literature, and Art, neatly bound, and illustrated with many highly-finished Engravings, published at One Vol., the remaining stock now offered at only Five Shillings each.

400 ILLUSTRATIONS TO HODGKIN'S COMIC ANNUAL.
URNING towards his companion, the elder Giant uttered these words in a grave majestic tone:

"Magog, does boisterous mirth becom the Giant Warder of this ancient city? Is this becoming demeanour for a watchful spirit over whose bodiless head so many years have rolled, so many changes swept like empty air—in whose impartible nostrils the scent of blood and crime, pestilence, cruelty and horror, has been familiar as breath to mortals—in whose sight Time has gathered in the harvest of centuries, and garnered so many crops of human pride, affections, hopes, and sorrows! Bethink you of our compact. The night wanes; feasting revelry and music have encroached upon our usual hours of solitude, and morning will be here apace. Ere we are stricken mute again, bethink you of our compact."

Pronouncing these latter words with more of impatience than quite accorded with his apparent age and gravity the Giant raised a long pole (which he still bears in his hand) and tapped his brother Giant rather smartly on the head; indeed the blow was so smartly administered, that the latter quickly withdrew his lips from the cask to which they had been applied, and catching up his shield and halbert assumed an attitude of defence. His irritation was but momentary, for he laid these weapons aside as hastily as he had assumed them, and said as he did so:

"You know, Gog, old friend, that when we animate these shapes which the Londoners of old assigned (and not unworthily) to the guardian genii of their city, we are susceptible of some of the sensations which belong to human kind. Thus when I taste wine, I feel blows; when I relish the one, I disrelish the other. Therefore, Gog, the more especially as your arm is none of the lightest, keep your good staff by your side, else we may chance to differ. Peace be between us."

"Amen!" said the other, leaning his staff in the window-corner; "Why did you laugh just now?"

"To think," replied the Giant Magog, laying his hand upon the cask, "of him who owned this wine, and kept it in a cellar hoarded from the light of day, for thirty years,—'till it should be fit to drink,' quoth he. He was two score and ten years old when he buried it beneath his house, and yet never thought that he might be scarcely 'fit to drink' when the wine became so. I wonder it never occurred to him to make himself unfit to be eaten. There is very little of him left by this time."

"The night is waning," said Gog mournfully.

"I know it," replied his companion, "and I see you are impatient. But look. Through the eastern window—placed opposite to us, that the first beams of the rising sun may every morning gild our giant faces—the moon-rays fall upon the pavement in a stream of light that to my fancy sinks through the cold stone and gushes into the old crypt below. The night is scarcely past its noon, and our great charge is sleeping heavily."

They ceased to speak, and looked upward at the moon. The sight of their large black rolling eyes filled Jack Toddyhigh with such horror that he could scarcely draw his breath. Still they took no note of him, and appeared to believe themselves quite alone.

"Our compact," said Magog after a pause, "is, if I understand it, that, instead of watching here in silence through the dreary nights, we entertain each other with stories of our past experience; with tales of the past, the present, and the future; with legends of London and her sturdy citizens from the old simple times. That every night at midnight when Saint Paul's bell tolls out one and we may move and speak, we thus discourse, nor leave such themes till the first grey gleam of day shall strike us dumb. Is that our bargain, brother?"

"Yes," said the Giant Gog, "that is the league between us who guard this city, by day in spirit, and by night in body also; and never on ancient holidays have its conduits run wine more merrily than we will pour forth our legendary lore. We are old chroniclers from this time hence. The crumbling walls encircle us once more, the postern-gates are closed, the drawbridge is up, and pent in its narrow den beneath, the water foams and struggles with the sunken starlings. Jerkins and quarter-staves are in the streets again, the nightly watch is set, the rebel, sad and lonely in his Tower dungeon tries to sleep and weeps for home and children. Aloft upon the gates and walls are noble heads glaring fiercely down upon the dreaming city, and vexing the hungry dogs that scent them in the air and tear the ground beneath with dismal howlings. The axe, the block, the rack, in their dark chambers give signs of recent use. The Thames floating past long lines of cheerful windows whence comes a burst of music and a stream of light, bears sullenly to the Palace wall the last red stain brought on the tide from Traitor's-gate. But your pardon, brother. The night wears, and I am talking idly."

The other Giant appeared to be entirely of this opinion, for during the foregoing rhapsody of his fellow-centinel he had been scratching his head with an air of comical uneasiness, or rather with an air that would have been very comical if he had been a dwarf or an ordinary-sized man. He winked too, and though it could not be doubted for a moment that he winked to himself, still he certainly cocked his enormous eye towards the gallery where the listener was concealed. Nor was this all, for he gaped; and when he gaped, Joe was horribly reminded of the popular prejudice on the subject of giants, and of their fabled power of smelling out Englishmen, however closely concealed.

His alarm was such that he nearly swooned and it was some little time before his power of sight or hearing was restored. When he recovered he found that the elder Giant was pressing the younger to commence the Chronicles, and that the latter was endeavouring to excuse himself, on the ground that the night was far spent and it would be better to wait until the next. Well assured by this, that he was certainly about to begin directly, the listener collected his faculties by a great effort, and distinctly heard Magog express himself to the following effect:—

In the sixteenth century and in the reign of Queen Elizabeth of glorious memory (albeit her golden days are sadly rusted with blood) there lived in the city of London a bold young 'prentice who loved his master's daughter. There were no doubt within the walls a great many young 'prentices in this condition, but I speak of only one, and his name was Hugh Graham.

This Hugh was apprenticed to an honest Bowyer who dwelt in the ward of Cheyne and was rumoured to possess great wealth. Rumour was quite as infallible in those days as at the present time but it happened then as now, to be sometimes right by accident. It stumbled upon the truth when it gave the old Bowyer a mint of money. His trade had been a profitable one in the time of King Henry the Eighth, who encouraged English archery to the utmost, and he had been prudent and discreet. Thus it came to pass that Mistress Alice his only daughter was the richest heiress in all his wealthy ward. Young Hugh had often maintained with staff and cudgel that she was the handsomest. To do him justice, I believe she was.
If he could have gained the heart of pretty Mistress Alice by knocking this conviction into stubborn people's heads, Hugh would have had no cause to fear. But though the Bowyer's daughter smiled in secret to hear of his doughty deeds for her sake, and though her little waiting-woman reported all her smiles (and many more) to Hugh, and though he was at vast expense in kisses and small coin to recompense her fidelity, he made no progress in his love. He dared not whisper it to Mistress Alice save on sure encouragement, and that she never gave him. A glance of her dark eye as she sat at the door on a summer's evening after prayer time, while he and the neighbouring 'prentices exercised themselves in the street with blunted sword and buckler would fire Hugh's blood so that none could stand before him; but then she glanced at others quite as kindly as on him, and where was the use of cracking crowns if Mistress Alice smiled upon the cracked as well as on the cracker?

Still Hugh went on, and loved her more and more. He thought of her all day, and dreamed of her all night long. He treasured up her every word and gesture, and had a palpitation of the heart whenever he heard her footstep on the stairs or her voice in an adjoining room. To him, the old Bowyer's house was haunted by an angel; there was enchantment in the air and space in which she moved. It would have been no miracle to Hugh if flowers had sprung from the rush-strewn floors beneath the tread of lovely Mistress Alice.

Never did 'prentice long to distinguish himself in the eyes of his lady-love so ardently as Hugh. Sometimes he pictured to himself the house taking fire by night, and he, when all drew back in fear, rushing through flame and smoke and bearing her from the ruins in his arms. At other times he thought of a rising of fierce rebels, an attack upon the city, a strong assault upon the Bowyer's house in particular, and he falling on the threshold pierced with numberless wounds in defence of Mistress Alice. If he could only enact some prodigy of valour, do some wonderful deed and let her know that she had inspired it, he thought he could die contented.

Sometimes the Bowyer and his daughter would go out to supper with a worthy citizen at the fashionable hour of six o'clock, and on such occasions Hugh wearing his blue 'prentice cloak as gallantly as 'prentice might, would attend with a lantern and his trusty club to escort them home. These were the brightest moments of his life. To hold the light while Mistress Alice picked her steps, to touch her hand as he helped her over broken ways, to have her leaning on his arm—it sometimes even came to that—this was happiness indeed!

When the nights were fair, Hugh followed in the rear, his eyes riveted on the graceful figure of the Bowyer's daughter as she and the old man moved on before him. So they threaded the narrow winding streets of the city, now passing beneath the overhanging gables of old wooden houses whence creaking signs projected into the street, and now emerging from some dark and frowning gateway into the clear moonlight. At such times, or when the shouts of straggling brawlers met her ear, the Bowyer's daughter would look timidly back at Hugh beseeching him to draw nearer; and then how he grasped his club and longed to do battle with a dozen rufflers, for the love of Mistress Alice!

The old Bowyer was in the habit of lending money on interest to the gallants of the Court, and thus it happened that many a richly-dressed gentleman dismounted at his door. More waving plumes and gallant steeds, indeed, were seen at the Bowyer's house, and more embroidered silks and velvets sparkled in his dark shop and darker private closet than at any merchant's in the city. In those times no less than in the present it would seem that the richest-looking cavaliers often wanted money the most.

Of these glittering clients there was one who always came alone. He was always nobly mounted, and having no attendant gave his horse in charge to Hugh while he and the Bowyer were closeted within. Once as he sprang into the saddle Mistress Alice was seated at an upper window, and before she could withdraw he had doffed his jewelled cap and kissed his hand. Hugh watched him caracoling down the street, and burnt with indignation. But how much deeper was the glow that reddened in his cheeks when raising his eyes to the casement he saw that Alice watched the stranger too!

He came again and often, each time arrayed more gaily than before, and still the little casement showed him Mistress Alice. At length one heavy day, she fled from home. It had cost her a hard struggle, for all her old father's gifts were strewn about her chamber as if she had parted from them one by one and know that the time must come when these tokens of his love would wring her heart—yet she was gone.

She left a letter commending her poor father to the care of Hugh, and wishing he might be happier than he could ever have been with her, for he deserved the love of a better and a purer heart than she had to bestow. The old man's forgiveness (she said) she had no power to ask, but she prayed God to bless him—and so ended with a blot upon the paper where her tears had fallen.

At first the old man's wrath was kindled, and he carried his wrong to the Queen's throne itself; but there was no redress he learnt at Court, for his daughter had been conveyed abroad. This afterwards appeared to be the truth, as there came from France, after an interval of several years, a letter in her hand. It was written in trembling characters, and almost illegible. Little could be made out save that she often thought of home and her old dear pleasant room—and that she had dreamt her father was dead and had not blessed her—and that her heart was breaking.

The poor old Bowyer lingered on, never suffering Hugh to quit his sight, for he knew now that he had loved his daughter and that was the only link that bound him to earth. It broke at length and he died, bequeathing his old 'prentice his trade and all his wealth, and solemnly charging him with his last breath to revenge his child if ever he who had worked her misery crossed his path in life again.

From the time of Alice's flight, the tilting-ground, the fields, the fencing school, the summer evening sports, knew Hugh no more. His spirit was dead within him. He rose to great eminence and repute among the citizens, but was seldom seen to smile and never mingled in their revelries or rejoicings. Brave, humane, and generous, he was beloved by all. He was pitied too by those who knew his story, and these were so many that when he walked along the streets alone at dusk, even the rude common people doffed their caps and mingled a rough air of sympathy with their respect.

One night in May—it was her birth-night and twenty years since she had left her home—Hugh Graham sat in the room she had hallowed in his boyish days. He was now a grey-haired man though still in the prime of life. Old thoughts had borne him company for many hours and the chamber had gradually grown quite dark, when he was roused by a low knocking at the outer door.

He hastened down, and opening it, saw by the light of a lamp which he had seized upon the way, a female figure crouching in the portal. It hurried swiftly past him and glided up the stairs. He looked out for pursuers. There were none in sight. No, not one.

He was inclined to think it a vision of his own brain when suddenly a vague suspicion of the truth flashed upon his mind. He barred the door and hastened wildly back. Yes, there she was—there, in the chamber he had quit—there in her old innocent happy home, so changed that none but he could trace one gleam of what she had been—there upon her knees—with her hands clasped in agony and shame before her burning face.

"My God, my God!" she cried, "now strike me dead! Though I have brought death and shame and sorrow on this roof, oh, let me die at home in mercy!"

There was no tear upon her face then, but she trembled and glanced round the chamber. Everything was in its old place. Her bed looked as if she had risen from it but that morning. The sight of these familiar objects marking the dear remembrance in which she had been held, and the blight she had brought upon herself was more than the woman's better nature that had carried her there, could bear. She wept and fell upon the ground.

A rumour was spread about, in a few days' time, that the Bowyer's cruel daughter had come home, and that Master Graham had given her lodging in his house. It was rumoured too that he had resigned her fortune, in order that she might bestow it in acts of charity, and that he had vowed to guard her in her solitude, but that they were never to see each other more. These rumours greatly incensed all virtuous wives and daughters in the ward, especially when they appeared to receive some corroboration from the circumstance of Master Graham taking up his abode in another tenement hard by. The estimation in which he was held, however, forbade any questioning on the subject, and as the Bowyer's house was close shut up, and nobody came forth when public shows and festivities were in progress, or to flaunt in the public walks, or to buy new fashions at the mercers' booths, all the well-conducted females agreed among themselves that there could be no woman there.

These reports had scarcely died away when the wonder of every good citizen, male and female, was utterly absorbed and swallowed up by a Royal Proclamation, in which her Majesty, strongly censuring the practice of wearing long Spanish rapiers of preposterous length (as being a bullying and swaggering custom, tending to bloodshed and public disorder) commanded that on a particular day therein named, certain grave citizens should repair to the city gates, and there, in public, break all rapiers worn or carried by persons claiming admission, that exceeded, though it were only by a quarter of an inch, three standard feet in length.

Royal Proclamations usually take their course, let the public wonder never so much. On the appointed day two citizens of high repute took up their stations at each of the gates, attended by a party of the city guard: the main body to enforce the Queen's will, and take custody of all such rebels (if any) as might have the temerity to dispute it: and a few to bear the standard measures and instruments for reducing all unlawful sword-blades to the prescribed dimensions. In pursuance of these arrangements, Master Graham and another were posted at Lud Gate, on the hill before Saint Paul's.

A pretty numerous company were gathered together at this spot, for, besides the officers in attendance to enforce the proclamation, there was a motley crowd of lookers-on of various degrees, who raised from time to time such shouts and cries as the circumstances called forth. A spruce young courtier was the first who approached; he unsheathed a weapon of burnished steel that shone and glistened in the sun, and handed it with the newest air to the officer, who, finding it exactly three feet long, returned it with a bow. Thereupon the gallant raised his hat and crying, "God save the Queen," passed on amidst the plaudits of the mob. Then came another—a better courtier still—who wore a blade but two feet long, whereat the people laughed, much to the disparagement of his honour's dignity. Then came a third, a sturdy old officer of the army, girded with a rapier at least a foot and a half beyond her Majesty's pleasure; at him they raised a great shout and roost of the spectators (but especially those who wore armourers or cutlers) laughed very heartily at the breakage which would ensue. But they were disappointed, for the old campaigner, coolly unbuckling his sword and bidding his servant carry it home again, passed through unarmed, to the great indignation of all the beholders. They relieved themselves in some degree by hooting a tall blustering fellow with a prodigious weapon, who stopped short on coming in sight of the preparations, and after a little consideration turned back again; but all this time no rapier had been broken although it was high noon, and all cavaliers of any quality or appearance were taking their way towards Saint Paul's churchyard.

During these proceedings Master Graham had stood apart, strictly confining himself to the duty imposed upon him, and taking little heed of anything beyond. He stepped forward now as a richly dressed gentleman on foot, followed by a single attendant, was seen advancing up the hill.

As this person drew nearer, the crowd stopped their clamour and bent forward with eager looks. Master Graham standing alone in the gateway, and the stranger coming slowly towards him, they seemed, as it were, face to face. The nobleman (for he looked one) had a haughty and disdainful air, which bespoke the slight estimation in which he held the citizen. The citizen on the other hand preserved the resolute bearing of one who was not to be frowned down or daunted, and who cared very little for any nobility but that of worth and manhood. It was perhaps some consciousness on the part of each, of these feelings in the other, that infused a more stern expression into their regards as they came closer together.

"Your rapier worthy Sir!"

At the instant that he pronounced these words Graham started, and falling back some paces, laid his hand upon the dagger in his belt.

"You are the man whose horse I used to hold before the Bowyer's door? You are that man? Speak!"

"Out, you 'prentice hound!" said the other.

"You are he! I know you well now!" cried Graham. "Let no man step between us two, or I shall be his murderer." With that he drew his dagger and rushed in upon him.

The stranger had drawn his weapon from the scabbard ready for the scrutiny, before a word was spoken. He made a thrust at his assailant, but the dagger which Graham clutched in his left hand being the dirk in use at that time for parrying such blows promptly turned the point aside. They closed. The dagger fell rattling upon the ground, and Graham wresting his adversary's sword from his grasp, plunged it through his heart. As he drew it out it snapped in two, leaving a fragment in the dead man's body.

All this passed so swiftly that the by-standers looked on without an effort to interfere; but the man was no sooner down than an uproar broke forth which rent the air. The attendant rushing through the gate proclaimed that his master, a nobleman, had been set upon and slain by a citizen; the word quickly spread from mouth to mouth; Saint Paul's cathedral and every bookshop ordinary and smoking house in the churchyard poured out its stream of cavaliers and their followers, who, mingling together in a dense tumultuous body, struggled, sword in hand, towards the spot.

With equal impetuosity and stimulating each other by loud cries and shouts the citizens and common people took up the quarrel on their side and encircling Master Graham a hundred deep, forced him from the gate. In vain he waved the broken sword above his head, crying that he would die on London's threshold for their sacred homes. They bore him on, and ever keeping him in the midst so that no man could attack him, fought their way into the city.

The clash of swords and roar of voices, the dust and heat and pressure, the trampling under foot of men, the distracted looks and shrieks of women at the windows above as they recognised their relatives or lovers in the crowd, the rapid tolling of alarm bells, the furious rage and passion of the scene were fearful. Those who being on the outskirts of each crowd could use their weapons with effect fought desperately, while those behind maddened with baffled rage struck at each other over the heads of those before them, and crushed their own fellows. Wherever the broken sword was seen above the people's heads, towards that spot the cavaliers made a new rush. Every one of these charges was marked by sudden gaps in the throng where men were trodden down, but as fast as they were made, the tide swept over them and still the multitude pressed on again, a confused mass of swords clubs staves broken plumes fragments of rich cloaks and doublets and angry bleeding faces, all mixed up together in inextricable disorder.

The design of the people was to force Master Graham to take refuge in his dwelling, and to defend it until the authorities could interfere or they could gain time for parley. But either from ignorance or in the confusion of the moment they stopped at his old house which was closely shut. Some time was lost in beating the doors open and passing him to the front. About a score of the boldest of the other party threw themselves into the torrent while this was being done, and reaching the door at the same moment with himself cut him off from his defenders.

"I never will turn in such a righteous cause so help me Heaven!" cried Graham in a voice that at last made itself heard, and confronting them as he spoke. "Least of all will I turn upon this threshold which owes its desolation to such men as ye. I give no quarter, and I will have none! Strike!"
For a moment they stood at bay. At that moment a shot from an unseen hand, apparently fired by some person who had gained access to one of the opposite houses, struck Graham in the brain and he fell dead. A low wail was heard in the air—many people in the concourse cried that they had seen a spirit glide across the little casement window of the Bowyer's house—

A dead silence succeeded. After a short time some of the flushed and heated throng lay down their arms and softly carried the body within doors. Others fell off or slunk away in knots of two or three, others whispered together in groups, and before a numerous guard which then rode up could muster in the street it was nearly empty.

Those who carried Master Graham to the bed up-stairs were shocked to see a woman lying beneath the window with her hands clasped together. After trying to recover her in vain, they laid her near the citizen who still retained, tightly grasped in his right hand, the first and last sword that was broken that day at Lud Gate.

The Giant uttered these concluding words with sudden precipitation, and on the instant the strange light which had filled the hall, faded away. Joe Toddyhigh glanced involuntarily at the eastern window and saw the first pale gleam of morning. He turned his head again towards the other window in which the Giants had been seated. It was empty. The cask of wine was gone, and he could dimly make out that the two great figures stood mute and motionless upon their pedestals.

After rubbing his eyes and wondering for full half an hour, during which time he observed morning come creeping on space, he yielded to the drowsiness which overpowered him and fell into a refreshing slumber. When he awoke it was broad day; the building was open, and workmen were busily engaged in removing the vestiges of last night's feast.

Stealing gently down the little stairs and assuming the air of some early loafer who had dropped in from the street, he walked up to the foot of each pedestal in turn, and attentively examined the figure it supported. There could be no doubt about the features of either; he recollected the exact expression they had worn at different passages of their conversation, and recognized in every line and lineament the Giants of the night. Assured that it was no vision but that he had heard and seen with his own proper senses, he walked forth, determining at all hazards to conceal himself in the Guildhall again that evening. He further resolved to sleep all day, so that he might be very wakeful and vigilant, and above all that he might take notice of the figures at the precise moment of their becoming animated and subsiding into their old state, which he greatly reproached himself for not having done already.
CORRESPONDENCE.

TO MASTER HUMPHREY.

"Sir,

"Before you proceed any further in your account of your friends and what you say and do when you meet together, excuse me if I proffer my claim to be elected to one of the vacant chairs in that old room of yours. Don't reject me without full consideration for if you do you'll be sorry for it afterwards—you will upon my life.

"I inclose my card, sir, in this letter. I never was ashamed of my name, and I never shall be. I am considered a devilish gentlemanly fellow, and I act up to the character. If you want a reference, ask any of the men at our club. Ask any fellow who goes there to write his letters, what sort of conversation mine is. Ask him if he thinks I have the sort of voice that will suit your deaf friend and make him hear if he can hear anything at all. Ask the servants what they think of me. There's not a rascal among 'em sir, but will tremble to hear my name. That reminds me—don't you say too much about that housekeeper of yours; it's a low subject, damned low.

"I tell you what sir. If you vote me into one of those empty chairs, you'll have among you a man with a fund of gentlemanly information that'll rather astonish you. I can let you into a few anecdotes about some fine women of title, that are quite high life sir—the tip-top sort of thing. I know the name of every man who has been out on an affair of honour within the last five and twenty years; I know the private particulars of every cross and squabble that has taken place upon the turf, at the gaming-table or elsewhere, during the whole of that time. I have been called the gentlemanly chronicle. You may consider yourself a lucky dog; upon my soul you may congratulate yourself, though I say so.

"It's an uncommon good notion that of yours, not letting anybody know where you live. I have tried it, but there has always been an anxiety respecting me which has found me out. Your deaf friend is a cunning fellow to keep his name so close. I have tried that too, but have always failed. I shall be proud to make his acquaintance—tell him so, with my compliments.

"You must have been a queer fellow when you were a child, confounded queer. It's odd all that about the picture in your first paper.—prosy, but told in a devilish gentlemanly sort of way. In places like that, I could come in with great effect with a touch of life—Don't you feel that?
"I am anxiously waiting for your next paper to know whether your friends live upon the premises, and at your expense, which I take it for granted is the case. If I am right in this impression I know a charming fellow (an excellent companion and most delightful company) who will be proud to join you. Some years ago he seconded a great many prize-fighters and once fought an amateur match himself; since then, he has driven several mails, broken at different periods all the lamps on the right-hand side of Oxford-street, and six times carried away every bell-handle in Bloomsbury-square, besides turning off the gas in various thoroughfares. In point of gentlemanliness he is unrivalled, and I should say that next to myself he is of all men the best suited to your purpose.

"Expecting your reply,

"I am,

"&c. &c."

Master Humphrey informs this gentleman that his application, both as it concerns himself and his friend, is rejected.
M. A. NATTALI'S CATALOGUE OF OLD BOOKS FOR 1840.

Containing SIX THOUSAND ARTICLES, in all classes of Literature, including an entire and well-selected CLASSICAL LIBRARY, collected by the late E. H. Barkley, Esq. for a Friend, may be procured GRATIS, by applying, PRE-Paid, to No. 19, Southampton-street, Covent-garden.

HEAL & SON'S FRENCH MATTRESSES.

HEAL AND SON

Have REMOVED from 283 to 106, OPPOSITE the CHAPEL, Tottenham-court-road. The demand for these much-approved Mattresses being so great as to render it impossible to keep the most extensive Stock in the Trade, not only of French Mattresses, but of every other description of Bedding, including every Variety and Quality of Pillows, Mattresses, Feather Beds, Blankets, Quilts, &c., is enabled to keep the most extensive Stock in the Trade, not only of French Mattresses, but of every other description of Bedding, including every Variety and Quality of Pillows, Mattresses, Feather Beds, Blankets, Quilts, &c.,

CORNES AND BUNIONS.

PAUL'S EVERY MAN'S FRIEND.

is a speedy and sure cure for those painful and troublesome eruptions without Cutting or Pain. It is a luxury to the tenderest Feet, acting on the Corn with the most gentle pressure, producing a delightful relief, and entirely eradicating both Corns and Bunions.

Prepared by John Fox, in boxes at 12s. 6d. a box, in one size for 25.90, and to be had of C. King, 25, Blackfriars road, and all wholesale and retail Medicine Vendors in Town and Country. The name has the name of John Fox on the Stamp. A 2s. 6d. box cures the most obstinate Corns.

Ask for PAUL'S EVERY MAN'S FRIEND.

WATERLOO HOUSE, 69, 78, and 71, St. Paul's, PAUL'S.

OBSERVE!—HALL and ALLIAN'S Novel promotions in Mousselincs de Laines, Challis, Cashmere Dresses, &c.

Great excitement has universally prevailed in consequence of the novel promotions of goods being made at Waterloo House for half the manipulation of the goods, in connexion with the humane dispositions that pervade the country. HALL and ALLIAN thus publicly announce another improvement of most remarkable designs and beautiful colorings in Mousselincs de Laines, with 15,000 new textured colorings especially produced for the Spring, which for Cashmere dresses cannot be excelled in beauty and cost. At this critical period, have offered for public approbation, with such successful results in purchasing the newest Patterns in Mousselincs, Challis, Cashmere, and fine Worsted stuffs, Handsomely-embroidered Irish Linens, Gros de Nauken (plain Shawl), beautifully-embroidered Japanese Cloths, Gros de Laines, with exquisite designs, and beautiful colorings in Mousselincs and Satin Uniforms, Cachmcu, and Embroideries, stuck and fancy, Cape de Lyon, Cloths; Gros and French Velvets, checked and fancy, Cashmere, Worsted Stuff, and Cheesecloth, which have been in great demand, and desired in every description, and which stand entirely for cheapness.

Milliners and the Trade are requested to inspect the Ribbon Stock, abundant in all the combined tastes of England and France, at unparalleled low prices. Ladies, Hotel Keepers, and others furnishing for abroad, are requested, particularly, to inspect the immense stock of Muslins requested particularly, to inspect their well-assorted stock of Irish Linens, with Reserve on all Fashionable, Shirtings, Trowellas, with the whole of which H. & A. can fully warrant being supplied under their personal direction.

OBSERVE! WATERLOO HOUSE, 69, 78, and 71, St. Paul's.

GOWLAND'S LOTION.

Carried on.

This elegant Preparation has attained its excellence by having united the properties of a purifier of the skin from every habitable and occasional impurity, with those of a preserver of the already glowing tints of beauty, by reducing the complexion, and sustaining that healthier brilliancy of the skin on which depends a continuance of the personal graces peculiar to youth.

"Sont. Shaw, London," is engraved on the bottle. Prices—2s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. Sold by all respectable Persons and medicine Vendors, of whom may be had.

SHEAR'S MINDORAGH for the Hair, price 2s.

HEELEY'S SUPERIOR STEEL PENS.

HEELEY'S DIAMOND PEN, Adapted for expeditious Writing, and possessing extraordinary Flexibility; 12 Pens on a Card, price 12.

HEELEY'S DIAMOND PEN, BROAD POINTS, For Engrossing, 6d.; or 12 Pens on a Card, price 12.

HEELEY'S MACROSYLE, or SWAN-QUILL PEN, A most dexterous Office Pen; 12 Pens on a Card, price 12.

HEELEY'S CLEVELAND'S PATENT PEN, Particularly suited for neat Writing, Mapping, &c.; 12 Pens on a Card, price 12.

HEELEY'S CLEVELAND'S PATENT PEN, Particularly suited for expeditious Writing; 12 Pens on a Card, 1s. 6d.

HEELEY'S RHADIA'GRAPHIC PEN, A most durable Office Pen; 12 Pens on a Card, price 12.

HEELEY'S RHADIA'GRAPHIC PEN, A most durable Office Pen; 12 Pens on a Card, price 12.

HEELEY'S EVER-POINTED PENCILS.

HEELEY'S EVER-POINTED PENCIL-CASE, With Reserve and delivery, 1s. 6d.; or highly-ornamented, 2s. 6d.

HEELEY'S EVER-POINTED PENCIL AND PENCIL-CASE, 1s. 6d.; or highly-ornamented, 2s. 6d.

THE BEST CUMBERLAND LEADS, H or M; 1s. the Packet.

REFORM YOUR TAILOR'S BILLS!

LADIES' MATRICES.

Descriptive Portraits of that class of designs that are most likely to be found in the various Novels, Operas, and Plays, and generally in the Illustrations of the most popular Magazines, are now engraved for the best and most correct representation of women, and can be had of the Publisher, and of every Wholesale and Retail Bookseller in Town and Country.
Illustrated by a New and Splendid Map of China, Plan of the River and Port of Canton, and a Map of Assam. The whole forming an interesting and popular volume.

By Robert Mudie, Esq.

Monthly, in imperial 4to, each part containing two Maps, price only 1s. 6d, full coloured.

GILBERT'S MODERN ATLAS OF THE EARTH.

With copious Letter-press.

Geographical, Commercial, and Descriptive.

By Robert Mudie, Esq.

The work will be published in twenty-five monthly parts; the letter-press, which will be entirely original, and not a mere compilation, as is generally resorted to in such cases, will bebeautifully printed in three columns, and containing as much as three hun·dred and seventy-two page in each part. This ample breadth of writing will afford scope for one of the most comprehensive systems of descriptive geography ever afforded to the public, besides the fifty maps, which will be unexcelled both for their beauty and accuracy.

The numbers will contain descriptions, not of the maps, because these speak for themselves, but of every circumstance connected with the situation, climate, vegetation, animals, and human inhabitants, with all their resources, occupations, relations, and intercourse, in the several portions of the earth's surface which the maps represent; and, as those maps take together form the general map of the world at the beginning of the work, they, with their accompanying letter-press, will afford a complete view of the earth, general as to the whole, and particular to every individual country.

We need hardly say that an atlas, so full and so perfect as it is determined this shall be, and yet so portable in its form as that it can be easily consulted, and be no encumbrance on the table of the parlor, the study, the counting-house, or the office, will be one of the most valuable works that has for many years been offered to the public. The proprietor pledges himself that no labour nor expense shall be spared; and the author claims the liberty of saying that he has been more than forty years a devoted student of geography, and nearly twenty of those years a teacher of it by maps and original disquisitions, and not by the mere repetition of compiled systems. Therefore, he trusts that, while the public do justice to the spirited undertaking of the proprie·tor, they will remember and repeat that favour which they have so often conferred upon the author.

A Selection of Some of the Numbers.

"A pretty and cheap Atlas, accompanied by very elaborate letter-press, from the popular pen of Mr. Robert Mudie."—Literary Gazette.

"A cheap and very useful, neat, and accurate collection of maps, with valuable geographical information, clearly and intelligibly conveyed."—Atlas News.

"Neatly engraved maps, with compact, well-written essay."—Court Journal.

"This is a cheap and neatly engraved Atlas; it promises also to be unusually accurate."—Monthly Review.

"Has the most recent discoveries, both in continents and sea, correctly delineated; we find, in Australia, the boundaries of South Australia marked, the new city of 'Adelaide,' 'Spencer's Gulf, and the mouth of the river 'Murray,' Sutherland, Sand, and the 'Ballina Islands,' near the nautical circle, distinguished in the most correct manner. It will rank amongst the first-rate atlases. Each number is accompanied with a great quantity of geographical information."—Reading Mercury.

"Not only a cheap and elegant, but also a very valuable work, the maps are crowned with a beauty and precision which we seldom look for in charts many times larger."—Britannia.

"We have no hesitation in pronouncing it to be a work of great intrinsic merit, and likely to prove no inconsiderable acquisition to the lovers of natural history, of geography, and of physical and political science, in the highest acceptance of that term."—Edinburgh Journal.

"The literary matter places in small compass a great quantity of information, reflecting the greatest credit upon the editor."—Weekly Times.

"Engraved in the first style of art—the letter-press isady written."—Sydney Times.

"It is really a desirable publication: the engraving is admirable, the work is entitled to public approbation and support."—Morning Despatch.

"The claims of no ordinary kind upon the ground of its intrinsic merits; it is correctly drawn and moderate in price, and contains all the improvements dictated by modern discovery. The letter-press exhibits a perfect mastery of the subject, with great care and propriety of style."—Liverpool Courier.

"It is only and lucidly written—the maps are excellent."—Sunday Times.

"Its moderate price, the superior execution of the maps, and the original letter-press by which they are accompanied, will render it a valuable addition to the collections of all naturalists."—Daily Register.

"Justifying all its professions—exquisitely engraved and carefully written, with very interesting and useful descriptive letter-press, and of exceeding great value."—Northampton Mercury.

London: Grattan and Gilbert, St. Patrick's Row. Orders received by all Booksellers.

CrITICISMS ON GILBERT'S MODERN ATLAS.

"It is with great pleasure that we perceive so handsome and complete a geographical work as this atlas, published at so cheap a rate, contemptible if you consider the quality of execution."—Geological Chronicle.

"It will prove to be a truly admirable work; it will be equally acceptable to the mass of science, the merchant, and the family of note."—York Courier.

"Popularly beautiful and cheap. The type is of the very best, and the letter-press is most agreeable; the atlas can only be praised, the engraving and price for it an immense circu- lation."—Bath Herald.

"We have more pleasure in recommending this publication to our readers, more beautiful engravings we never saw; we shall be heartily glad to see it prosper."—Derby Mercury.

"Yes! we must at once the most excellent, the cheapest, and most useful general Atlas ever published."—Glasgow Journal.

"The letter-press exhibits a masterly grasp of the subject; the work is executed with the highest excellence of modern art, and will reflect credit on all concerned in its production."—Keme's Bath Journal.

"The nearest and dearest we have ever seen."—Birmingham Journal.

"A work of great promise, and one of the cheapest we have seen."—Worcester Journal.

"It is very valuable and a cheap atlas. The last disquisitions, so far as the most minute cases, are satisfactorily laid down."—Lincoln Gazette.

"Those who do not possess an atlas have here a first-rate one, combining correctness and beauty, at a moderate cost."—Liverpool Chronicle.

"Promising to be a most desirable publication."—Evesham Standard.

"We have seldom seen a work of greater promise, we do not hesitate to recommend it as the best ever published."—Kensith Gazette.

"A very cheap, and, at the same time, splendid work."—Evesham Journal.