Rockies' Entrepreneurs of the Year announced

By The Denver Post

Six Entrepreneurs of the Year from the Rocky Mountain region were announced last night at an awards banquet at the downtown Denver Westin Hotel.

An independent panel of judges selected the award recipients from 85 nominations.

The six categories and the winners are:

■ Emerging entrepreneur: Kevin G. Olson, president, and Chad H. Olson, CEO, of The Pro Image Inc., in Bountiful, Utah. The 5-year-old company is the largest franchiser of professional and collegiate sports merchandise in the country.

■ Supporter of entrepreneurship: Duane D. Pearsall, general partner of Columbine Venture Funds, Englewood. Pearsall has guided many companies into successful ventures.

■ Master entrepreneur: James C. Campbell, president of Lifecare, in Lafayette. Founded in 1968, Lifecare is the world leader in the portable ventilator industry.

■ Services: Celestino E. Archuleta, president and CEO of National Systems & Research Co., Colorado Springs. NSR is a 10-year-old engineering firm offering services that cover the entire life cycle of a data-processing system.

■ Retail/wholesale/distribution: James M. Temple, president of Case Logic Inc., Boulder. The company is the premier manufacturer and distributor of portable cassette storage cases in the United States.

■ High technology: Douglas S. Schatz, president of Advanced Energy Industries Inc., Fort Collins. Established in 1980, Advanced Energy provides power supplies, mainly to the semiconductor and thin film industries.

The awards were sponsored by Ernst & Young, Inc. Magazine, Merrill Lynch, and The Denver Business Journal.
